MAYOR ENDS SECRET FOOD QUIZ

Today

Again East to West.
The Reality of Drought.
Romantic Names.
A Great Country.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

LAS VEGAS, New Mexico, Feb. 13.

THIS IS WRITTEN on the train, westbound, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, third trip across the continent within a month. Now passing Morley, a little place in the big state of Colorado near the place where Dick Wootton built his ranch house long ago. He little thought he lived above a coal mine.

On the right of the track is a great pile of black dust. People live around that hole in the ground as ants live around a little hole in your garden path. And, most important, the biggest, finest building on a hill in the bright sunlight, is the public school.

Everywhere in this western country the school buildings are finer than any others.

ON THE LEFT of the track mules gallop and buck around their corral, pointing their hind hoofs toward the sky, waiting their turn to work in the dark coal tunnels.

It is hard to realize that not long ago in England women worked in coal mines with tunnels so low it was impossible to stand up. They crawled on hands and knees, dragging small coal cars attached to chains fastened around the woman's neck and passing under her body.

And it is hard to believe that in this country recently boys of grade school age worked on the breakers, with bleeding fingers sorting sharp pieces of slate from good coal. There is progress.

RESPECTABLE New York financiers are annoyed by Western senators, clamoring for drought relief. Drought seems so unreal in New York, where you get anything you choose to order, alcoholic, and have the Hudson River on one side, East River on the other.

Those financiers would change their minds if they could have seen from this Santa Fe "Chief" this morning, just west of La Junta, Col. Dead animals—horses, cows, calves—lying beside the fences, pitifully emaciated, killed by lack of water and pasture. Fortunately rain is falling, snow piling up in the mountains, and farmers can look forward to a better year.

THERE IS interest in every mile of travel across your glorious country. One hundred miles off to the north is Pike's Peak, visible on a clear day.

In the fields beside you lie thousands of black rocks, thrown up by some volcano long ago.

Names out here are romantic, thanks to the Spaniards. Earl, Col., possesses the Spanish peaks, or "Los Dos Hermanos," "The Two Brothers."

To the West is a mountain range called Sangre De Cristo, "Blood of Christ."

To the West runs the river Purgatoire, meaning "purgatory" in French.

The honest cowboy saved time and effort, caling it "Picketwire."

THREE POWERFUL engines push and pull you up the mountain to Raton Pass. In Trinidad stands a statue of Kit Carson that would interest your little boy. He was the first farmer out in this locality.

North of the city, a mountain peak 6,500 feet high is called "Simpsons Rest" in memory of an old pioneer who insisted on being buried on the top. Where is he now?

The Sangre De Cristo range is 14,000 feet high.

West of the track runs the Rio De Las Animas Perdidas "River of the Lost Souls," romantically named because many men were killed there by Indians.

Our American names are less romantic than Spanish names. For our mountains we choose "Eagle Tail," "Baldy," etc.

So passes the country mile after mile, hundreds, thousands of miles from the ocean on one side of us to the ocean on the other. It never grows tiresome.

Just now rain is falling over millions of New Mexico acres and each solitary shepherd, heavy coat over his head, his great band of sheep nibbling, with sheep dogs circling round, is happy. You must see all of this country. Railway rates are lower, a small automobile will carry you.

WET MEMBERS of New Mexico's legislature have what they call a good idea. Prohibition applies only to "persons, associations, corporations and cannot prohibit a sovereign state from manufacturing and selling liquor"

On that theory they propose to spend $50,000 of state money on a brewery or distillery and set up dispensaries "wherever necessary for the convenience of the people." The creators of that pleasing theory will probably find that the Constitution of the United States applies to the states as well as to individual citizens.

The Supreme Court is on record as in favor of prohibition and the Constitution means whatever the Supreme Court says it means.

MANY AMERICANS listening to the voice of Pope Pius on the radio yesterday probably wondered why the pontiff spoke in Latin instead of in a modern language.

The use of Latin is typical of Vatican conservatism. The Catholic Church moves slowly and carefully, considering time by centuries, not by minutes.

ALSO LATIN is understood by Catholic priests all over the world, and the Pope's first radio address was doubtless intended for those priests that receive

'Hymie' Martin Blocks Move To Take Him to Cleveland; Bank Holdup Clue Checked

City Detective Walter Monaghan and a teller of the Manchester Savings Bank and Trust Company will leave for Cleveland today in an effort to identify Julius J. Redlich, 27, held in connection with the slaying of William W. Potter in Cleveland, as one of the gang which robbed the Manchester bank of $50,000.

Hyman Martin (Pittsburgh Hymine), arrested here yesterday as a suspect in connection with the Potter slaying, was committed to jail today pending investigation and for a hearing.

Suspect Redlich

Martin's counsel has started habeas corpus proceedings. A Cleveland dispatch today said a warrant had been issued there charging Martin with murder in connection with Potter's death.

Shown a photograph of Redlich today, officials of the Manchester bank said he "very closely resembled one of the bandits.

Redlich and Martin, Cleveland police said, both occupied apartments in the building where Potter was found slain.

GIRL IDENTIFIES MARTIN

Queen Esther Morgan, 16, Cleveland high school girl, identified Martin here yesterday as an occupant of the apartment. Viewing Martin through a peephole, Betty Gray, arrested with Redlich, also identified Martin as the

'Ride' Victim Found Near Beaver

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—The body of a man with two bullet wounds in the back of the head was found along a highway near Mechanisburg, Beaver County, last night and authorities today were attempting to establish the victim's identity. He was between 25 and 35 years old.

The man apparently had been "taken for a ride," police said, and was shot and thrown from an automobile. He was clad in workmen's clothing and in his pockets were several "number" pool tickets. There was no money in his clothing.

The body was found by a Hanover minister, who was returning with his wife from a visit with friends shortly before midnight. Authorities were notified and when they examined the body they said the man had been dead for little more than an hour.

COUNCIL OPENS HALL HEARING

Opposition to the consent ordinance now in Council for approval of the Nicola site for a Town Hall will be presented before proponents of the site put in their side of the case.

This was the ruling of Council President John S. Herron, when the councilmanic hearing opened this afternoon. James C. Chaplin, of the Allegheny County Town Hall Association, who filed the original protest, had just begun speaking when former Mayor W. A. Magee said it was proper for the proponents of the ordinance to present their side first. After

Marriage License Trade Brisk on Friday, 13th

Friday the thirteenth, a dismal rainy day at that, did not stop business at the marriage license office today. Superstition did not even discourage one bride-to-be not of age, who had to return to McKees Rocks for her mother.

Marie Repack, 20, of 108 Ella street, McKees Rocks, and Steven Wojanis, of 179 Stowe avenue, McKees Rocks, were the second couple to apply for license. They hadn't realized it was the thirteenth. Marie was not of age and as they left for home with fingers crossed, the girl remarked:

"I surely hope there is nothing to this Friday the thirteenth."

The first license on the supposedly unlucky day was issued to Miss Marie Rudy and Carl Leipold, both of 920 Dohrman avenue, McKees Rocks. Attorney E. Morcroft, Jr., of 481 Dawson avenue, Bellevue, and Miss Helen S. Tarr, of 38 Grant avenue, Bellevue, received the second license. License office clerks expected business to continue right along.

U.S. MARINES TO EVACUATE NICARAGUA

Details Pursuing Bandits Will Leave in June, All To Be Recalled by 1932

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—The United States is to withdraw marines from Nicaragua.

Acceptance by President Moncada of Nicaragua of a definite plan to substantially reduce marine forces in Nicaragua by June and pave the way for complete withdrawal after the elections of 1932 was announced today by Secretary Stimson.

COMBATANTS FIRST

The Marines to be withdrawn by June, plans for which will become immediately effective, are those on combat duty against the insurgent forces and total about 800. The remaining Marine force will be stationed in Managua, and will devote their attention solely to training purposes and as an aviation unit required in some sections due to lack of roads.

By June the Marine force of 500 will be in contrast to one of over 5,000 in Nicaragua on January 1, 1929.

STIMSON'S PLAN

The plan was devised by Stimson while in conference with American Minister Hanna, Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy, Army officer, who supervised the 1928 elections, and Brig. Gen. Douglas McDougal, former commander of the Nicaraguan National Guard and a United States Marine officer.

The plan covers provision to pay for the increase by Nicaragua of the guard and looks toward the eventual suppression of the insurgent forces in the republic.

SPLIT ON BONUS DEVELOPS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—A split developed in the House Ways and Means Committee today over the Bacharach plan of raising the loan value of veterans' compensation certificates from 22 to 50 per cent. The bill was formally reported out, 17 to 4.

Although the committee yesterday unanimously approved the plan, estimated to cost $700,000,000, four Republicans turned against it today, pending further investigation of its effect on the Treasury.

While the Treasury has remained silent on the Bacharach plan, the opposition of Chairman Hawley, of the committee, was accepted as an indication that the Treasury may actively fight the measure, which represents a compromise with backers of full cash payment of the certificates totaling $3,400,000,000.

Roberta told reporters they were en route to Hongkong to visit the grave of her father, Robert Semple, a missionary who died in 1911. The girl said her mother still was a bit nervous, but that the voyage across the Pacific had done her much good.

War-Time Rail Line Built Just For Mr. Ripley

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

THE SHORTEST railroad in the world has just been scrapped. It was a mile long and was used to transport war supplies on Governors Island.

LIKE MOST governmental war projects, it was built so Ripley could make a cartoon of it.

AN AMERICAN motor truck broke all records by carrying 10 tons up the Matterhorn. Nine tone of it was the high French tariff.

FARM REHABILITATION will be a success if they save the scarecrow.

ROBBERS GRABBED eight hundred thousand in mutilated money. It was all torn in half. The government keeps the other half of the bills as the income tax.

Refugees' Plight Stirred Pershing

The distress of refugees fleeing before the advance of the German armies deeply stirred Gen. John J. Pershing, he reveals in his memoirs. It led him to a vigorous denuncation of warfare, and the causes leading up to a conflict between nations. Another self-revealing portrait of the American commander-in-chief is presented in today's Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

Frank Hawkins, 58, of 131 East Jefferson street, North Side, father of seven children, hanged himself with a clothesline in the living room of his home at 7 o'clock this morning, on the birthday of his youngest daughter, Dorothy Anne, who is 5 years old today.

His wife, Josephine, 47, returned Alice Catterall, of 822 Freeland street, in time to witness the arrival of firemen from No. 43 Engine House. They had been hurriedly summoned by her daughter, Alice, 16, when she saw the rope knotted about the kitchen door knob.

Contractor at Meeting Says Buying System Was Branded as 'Incompetent'

Mayor Kline's short and secret investigation of the charges that Director of Supplies Bertram L. Succop frequently accepts the highest bids on city food contracts ended today—with a report that the Mayor would effect a change in the bidding system.

The investigation ended after the Mayor had held a two and one-half hour round-table discussion with eight or more invited wholesale grocers, a discussion featured by the absence of John D. Houston, who refused the invitation because the meeting was secret. Houston's charges precipitated this investigation.

None of the dealers had anything to say after the conference, but M. L. Caplan, of the Caplan Grocery Company, quoted the Mayor when he stepped out of the meeting for a few minutes.

CALLED 'INCOMPETENT'

Caplan said the Mayor had branded the present system of bidding for city food contracts as "incompetent," and that he would effect a hangge which would allow for open bidding.

The Mayor himself announced he was "very well pleased with the way the matter stands." He added:

"Suggestions were asked and given for everyone. All were free to talk. Dr. Kerr and myself will confer late this afternoon to discuss further aspects of the case. I will make out my report from the findings of the meeting and submit it to Council, I hope, by Monday."

The Mayor said that Houston's letters to Council and himself had been discussed at the meeting.

Despite the Mayor's satisfaction there were accepted reports today that Council, after having once referred the charges to the Mayor, would vote for an open hearing of them in answer to the protests against secrecy.

And to criticism, Franklin P. Booth, former director of supplies

Gen. Edwards was on the operating table for an hour and 15 minutes, being brought back to his bed at 10:10 a. m.

Five minutes later Irving L. Peatfield, who served under the gallant commander of the "YD", was taken to a room near the general's bedside to give a pint of his life's blood to provide strength to the stricken 71-year-old warrior.

HOOVER SPEECH SEEN AS OPENING DRIVE IN '32 CAMPAIGN

OBEDIENCE TO LAW URGED

President Declares Against Nullification, Praises Republican Party's Record

By GEORGE E. DURNO,
International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Political prognosticators today were analyzing President Hoover's Lincoln Day address, broadcast from the White House study last night, with a strong suspicion it constituted the first serious document in his campaign for re-election.

Although the speech was briefer than most presidential utterances Mr. Hoover managed to:

1. Attack the "unceasing agitation" for federal assumption of new financial and regulatory burdens which, he asserted, belong peculiarly to the states and local governments.

2. Declare against "nullification," and call for law obedience and adherence to constitutional processes.

3. Plead for party regularity and majority rule.

4. Praise the Republican party as the "party of responsibility."

The President's remarks were sent out over the complete hookups of both broadcasting systems, while G. O. P. headquarters here arranged Republican rallies all over the country to listen-in. It was his first speech of consequence in a little over four months.

STATES' RIGHTS

Mr. Hoover was quite positive in his stand on the question of states' rights and states' responsibilities, and he brought the situation up to date by asserting it was up to the American people to fight their own way out of the current economic depression. The government already has undertaken its share of the burden, he said, adding:

"Though less pregnant with disaster than in Lincoln's time), the dominant problem today in our form of government turns in large degree upon the issue of the relationship of federal, state and local government responsibilities. We are faced with unceasing agitation that the federal government shall assume new financial burdens, that it shall undertake increased burdens in regulations of abuses and in the prosecution of crime.

"Carried to its logical extreme, all this shouldering of individual and community responsibility upon the government can lead but to the superstate where every man becomes the servant of the state and real liberty is lost."

OPPOSES NULLIFICATION

That portion of his address which bore inferentially on the prohibition issue was brief but pointed. Enumerating the various principles Lincoln stood for, Mr. Hoover said:

"You will find him pounding at the public mind against nullification and for adherence to constitutional processes of government. No stronger statement has ever been made than that of Lincoln upon obedience to law as the very foundation of our republic."

The plea for party organization also was based upon the Emancipator. The President said:

"Lincoln was a believer in party government. He realized, as we also must realize, that fundamentally our whole self-government is conceived and born of majority rule, and to enable the majority to express itself we must have party organization.

"Lincoln led in founding the Republican party and he gloried in his party. His tradition has dominated it to this day. It was and is a party of responsibility; it was and is a party of the Constitution."

Building Increase Bill Sent Hoover

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—The Elliott bill to increase the public building program by $100,000,000 was sent to President Hoover today after the House accepted the conference report already agreed to by the Senate.

The measure raises the public building program outside of the District of Columbia to $415,000,000, exclusive of $50,000,000 to be obtained from the sale of obsolescent buildings. It would permit the Treasury Department to go forward with approximately 200 projects, none of which is specified.

Senators at $10 Dinner, Delay Relief Bill

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—Thirty senators were chided in the Senate today for having attended the $10-a-plate farewell dinner last night of Senator Charles S. Deneen (Rep.), of Illinois.

There was some point to the teasing as the banquet forced administration leaders to abandon a contemplated night session of debate on the $20,000,000 drought relief bill.

It also came on the heels of the ironical resolution, introduced by Senator Brock, millionaire candy manufacturer from Tennessee, asking senators to go on a "bread and water diet until the drought bill is enacted."

Brock said senators would get a "deeper appreciation of human suffering" in the drought areas, if they experienced the "pangs of hunger."

FRIDAY THE 13TH! :-: By Quin Hall

COUNCIL FOOD QUIZ HINTED

and county controller, added his voice. Booth said that it was silly for Council to refer the charges to the Mayor, inasmuch as the Mayor and the director award the contracts, hence the Mayor is, in effect, investigating himself. Booth also raised the point that, under an ordinance enacted some years ago, the controller is charged with a responsibility in fulfilling the food contracts.

SUCCOP PRESENT

Among those present at today's hearing were Bertram L. Succop, director of supplies, whose frequent awards of contracts to high bidders—notably the L. H. Parke Company—brought Houston's charges of discrimination; Controller Kerr and Dr. S. J. Hammers, superintendent of the city hospital at Mayview, for whose patients the higher priced foods were bought.

Among the wholesale grocers were Jesse Stewart, M. L. Caplan, Herman Caplan, Fred Schuster, Fred Fichtel, John Irwin, of the L. H. Parke Company, whose high bids have frequently been accepted; Harry Rom and a representative of Libby, McNeill & Libby. Attorney Fred Ruslander also was there.

KERR CRITICISED

Mr. Houston freely criticized City Controller James P. Kerr in a letter to Mayor Kline in which he refused to attend any except a public hearing. His letter:

"I indeed appreciate the honor of the invitation to confer with you in the matter of my complaint regarding methods in the Department of Supplies. When this affair was no more than the humble petition of an insignificant person who had been unable to obtain redress by appealing to the director, and who then had invoked the aid of City Council, I would have conferred with you willingly.

"However, now that the complaint has been echoed by thousands of those who have been wronged by the director as well by tens of thousands of hard-pressed taxpayers whose funds have been squandered through his notoriously irregular methods, I have no right or authority to speak for these persons if I did attend your conference. They no doubt desire to hear and be heard and to question in public the city officials whose names have been mentioned in these scandals.

"By the papers I observe you are quoted as saying that the Department of Supplies is in a 'rut.' After reading the additional disclosures in today's papers, I would say it is in a 'hole.' The inaction of the City Controller grieves me exceedingly. His failure to heed the written protest I sent him was the beginning of this exposure, and if he were acting in collusion with the director of supplies, the effect on the taxpayer could not be more detrimental. If the Controller will not guard the public purse from the assaults of the vicious and dishonest, it is left, as Wolsey in his age, 'Naked to its enemies.'

ROBBERS DROP USELESS BILLS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—The mutilated currency stolen by thugs early yesterday in the Union Station was discovered by police in an up-town alley.

The three registered mail pouches in which the worthless pieces of money were being shipped from the Federal Reserve Bank in New York to the Treasury here, were not located. The bills, worth $807,000, had they been whole, were wrapped in 11 bundles.

In another alley nearby, police found several packages of shotgun shells, from which the shot had been extracted and steel slugs inserted. They continued the search for the three or four robbers believed involved in the crime, hoping to connect the abandoned money and the shells.

The hold-up, labeled by Treasury officials as a "gold brick" robbery, took place early yesterday when two thugs rushed Peter Johnson, an armed mail clerk, and after bludgeoning him unconscious, carried the sacks to a waiting car and escaped.

BIRTH-CONTROL BILL URGED ON SENATE

Advocates Tell Committee Problem Is Key to Social Ills; Hear Foes Tomorrow

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Scores of advocates of birth control packed the committee room today as hearings on the Gillett bill to legalize dissemination of contraceptive information opened before a Senate judiciary sub-committee.

The day was devoted to hearing proponents of the bill, with tomorrow given over to its opponents.

The bill of Senator Gillett (Rep.), Massachusetts, was described "as the most important piece of social legislation to come before you at this time or any other time," by Mrs. Thomas N. Hepburn, of Hartford, Conn.

"KEY TO SOCIAL ILLS"

She declared the question of birth control is at the bottom of all prevailing social ills, including poverty and unemployment.

Mrs. Margaret Sanger, of New York, the country's foremost advocate, testified:

"The effect of the law is simply to keep alive hypocrisy and evasion. The harm that it has done far outweighs the good."

"JUNIOR LEAGUE FOR BILL"

Prof. Roswell H. Johnson, of Pittsburgh, said birth control already was being practiced generally "among the members of the upper class."

He urged Congress, by passing the Gillette bill, to "strike out of the statute books this obsolescent piece of unscientific legislation."

The Rev. Charles Francis Potter, of New York, declared:

"Birth control tends to prevent war. The bird of war is not the eagle, but the stork, as nations expand beyond the ability of their own land to sustain. They demand room for expansion and colonization, and the result is war."

Mrs. Douglas Moffatt, of New York, representing the Junior League of that city, said her organization was "overwhelmingly in favor" of the Gillett bill.

Schwab and Cuban President in Chat

HAVANA, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Charles M. Schwab, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, told President Gerardo Machado he had implicit confidence in the future of Cuba and his company intended an extensive expansion of its activities in the republic.

A friendship of more than 30 years, dating back before Cuba was a republic, caused the President personally to invite the steel man to the palace and the two reminisced for nearly an hour.

Senators Reject Muscle Shoals Bill

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Congressional conferees failed again today to reach a solution to the problem which has been perplexing Congress for 10 years, what to do with Muscle Shoals.

The Senate conferees rejected the latest House compromise proposal, but would not agree to report a formal disagreement, which would place the legislation before the two houses again for new votes.

man to whom she loaned her key the afternoon of the murder.

The trap by which city detectives snared Hymie was baited by a pretty blonde, who said she had been double-crossed by Hymie. With a pillow and fresh linens, Mrs. Martin, Hymie's wife, came to Central Police Station today, but Hymie refused to see her.

Martin continued to deny his implication in the murder, and city detectives announced they would take a companion of his in custody to check Martin's story.

KNOWN TO POLICE

Martin is well known to police here, having been arrested in a stabbing affray in which Mike Murgie, now serving life sentence for murder, also was involved. Police said Martin denied knowledge of the Cleveland murder, but admitted knowing Redlich.

Potter's body was found last Sunday, on the eve of his trial for perjury in connection with the Cleveland playground scandal. He was believed to have been killed on the night of February 3.

Pittsburgh police, checking up on Redlich, learned that in 1926 he was convicted of stealing $5,600 from a branch of the Cleveland Trust Company and was sentenced to the Mansfield Reformatory.

Between these two highs the pressure is relatively low, the lowest over Ontario and rain is falling from Eastern Ontario southwestward over the Ohio Valley states to Arkansas. The rainfall was slight over the Upper Ohio Valley states but generous over the lower Ohio Valley, Missouri and Arkansas. The rain will continue over this section today, changing to snow flurries tonight. This will be followed by cold weather which now prevails over the plains states. Temperature will be somewhat below freezing by Saturday morning and much colder by Saturday night.

a brief argument President Herron overruled Magee's objection.

In addition to Magee and Chaplin, others present when the hearing began included Frank Wilbur Main and T. Thomas Kenyon, representing residents of the Schenley Farms district, and W. H. Neumeyer, representing North Side business men.

A consent ordinance, providing for approval of the Nicola site by the city, is now before Council.

Among one of the objectors today was to be Webster Hinnau, manager of the McCully Engineering Company, who advocates a new downtown site, one bounded by Bigelow boulevard, Washington street, Wylie avenue and Tunnel street.

Accessibility to hotels and railroad depots was stressed by Hinnan, who said it had been learned that the property, 228,000 square feet, can be bought for approximately $2,280,000. The building could be erected at an estimated cost of $3,000,000, leaving a surplus of $720,000, Hinnan reasoned, out of the $6,000,000 authorized, to beautify the surrounding grounds.

Shakespeare Loses Drama League Poll

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Shakespeare lost 4 to 1 when the Dramatic League polled its subscribers as to their preference in the forthcoming Jane Cowl productions.

For every one of the 9,000 subscribers who wanted to see the great bard's "Twelfth Night," there were four who preferred "Art and Mrs. Bottle." Hence Miss Cowl will play "Art and Mrs. Bottle" for three weeks and the Shakespearean comedy for one only.

25 MILLIONS MORE URGED FOR RELIEF

Borah and Wheeler Would Make Fund Available at Discretion of President

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—An appropriation of $25,000,000 to President Hoover, to be used "in his discretion" for the relief of human suffering among persons too poor to procure federal loans, was proposed today by the insurgent group as a supplement to the administration's $20,000,000 drought relief bill.

The supplemental appropriation would be directed to the President to be used, if continued unemployment or drought creates a national emergency, next summer. The money would be to purchase food, clothing and medicine, or provide any other relief desired by the President.

INDORSED BY BORAH

This suggestion was made by Senator Wheeler (Dem.), of Montana, and inferentially indorsed by Senator Borah (Rep.), of Idaho. Both agreed with administration leaders the pending drought-relief bill would take care of farmers, able to secure loans, but protested it provided no relief for farmers who lacked security. The whole insurgent group was satisfied with the drought bill as far as it went.

Administration leaders announced they would hold the Senate in continuous session until the drought measure is approved. It will be appended to the Interior Department appropriation bill and subsequently must be approved by the House. The measure already has the indorsement of House leaders and President Hoover.

HYDE STIRS CAPITOL

The Capitol, meanwhile, reverberated with discussions of the "interpretation" given the drought measure by Secretary of Agriculture Hyde. After declaring it was the duty of the Red Cross to provide food, clothing and medicine to drought sufferers, Hyde admitted "there could be no prohibition against the proceeds of such loans being used for food or other supplies." He also pledged a "fair and sympathetic interpretation" in administering the fund.

This satisfied everybody the $20,000,000 could be used for the food loans," which President Hoover assailed a month ago as "perilously near a dole."

It was also a complete reversal of policy by Hyde, but it saved the administration from the threat of a special session of Congress after March 4.

Sweet Eaters Sleep Well, Scientists Say

HAMILTON, N. Y., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—For sweet slumber eat sweets. Colgate psychologists have found out that at Skidmore co-eds sleep better than men students at Colgate. The two girls who ate the most carbohydrate had perfect sleep scores. The 34 leaders in consumption of carbohydrates, in coffee, on cereal, at the drug store or in candy had the least trouble getting to sleep, were bothered less by dreams and did not need to be called twice in the morning.

Public Funds Can't End Depression, Coolidge Says

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Feb. 13.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

By a remarkable coincidence the Treasury representatives of two opposite poles of political thought, Ogden Mills in the United States and Philip Snowden in Great Britain, simultaneously reach the same conclusions concerning governmental finance. Both say that heavy expenditures will cause a deficit at the end of the fiscal year and that their respective governments cannot go on increasing appropriations without incurring disagreeable consequences in the way of increased taxes. Yet it seems almost impossible to prevent the general run of legislators from thinking that when finances are depressed we can relieve ourselves by taxing ourselves.

Calvin Coolidge

By implication, Chancellor Snowden indorses the same method advocated by so many of our domestic relievers. His inference is that by our reducing its debt to us Great Britain should have been or should now be relieved out of the treasury of the United States.

Because our government was able to reduce its debt and its taxes, our problem is not so acute as that of the British. But it differs in degree, not in kind. Particular and temporary support for peoples in distress can be paid out of public funds, but relief from domestic or international economic depression cannot be provided by the national Treasury.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Pope May Deliver Radio Talk Easter; World Praises Speech

VATICAN CITY, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—While a decision has not yet been made, there is a strong possibility that Easter Sunday will be chosen by Pope Pius XI for his next radio address to the world, it was learned today.

A high Vatican official informed International News Service that the pontiff definitely has decided to avail himself fully of the new means of communicating his messages to the world, but that plans for future broadcasts have not yet been completed.

Meanwhile, the world upon which the pronounced solemn pontificial blessing yesterday in the most extensive radio broadcast ever attempted felicitated the Pontiff today, and in hundreds of telegrams received here congratulated His Holiness for his enterprise in setting a precedent in papal history.

The voice of the Pontiff, addressing itself in sonorous Latin and a second time in native Italian to "all creation," and extending an apostolic benediction to "the city and world," was heard by a world audience of unestimated millions—an audience encompassing the earth and its peoples in a manner undreamed of by any of the 260 preceding popes.

TRIUMPH FOR RADIO

Messages pouring in here from the scattered lands indicated that Vatican City's powerful station HVJ came up to all expectations, with reception successful in most places.

The Pope's broadcast, inaugurating the Vatican City radio station constructed under supervision of Senator Guglielmo Marconi and celebrating the ninth anniversary of Pius XI's coronation, marked not only a new era in papal communication with the world at large but also signified an epochal triumph in radio enterprise.

Although adverse atmosphere conditions in some countries interfered with smooth reception of the Pontiff's speech, the 250 broadcasting stations linked in an intricate net for nearly two hours to transmit the proceedings in Vatican City reported gratifying results. From now on Vatican City Station HVJ will be regularly "on the air" each Monday at 3:30 p. m. (9:30 a. m. eastern standard time.)

POPE FEELS 'MIKE FRIGHT'

Pope Pius, considered one of the most progressive and popular figures to occupy the Pontificial throne, displayed keen interest in his first appearance before "the mike." Visibly moved as he entered into the chamber of the room which housed the most modern and latest invention created by man, he stood before its intricate machinery and looked long and thoughtfully at the dials and numerous appliances.

He bestowed a dubious look upon the gold-mounted microphone, and in stepping before it visibly squared his shoulders under his white papal vestments to suppress the familiar "mike fright."

To Senator Marconi he said:

"Undoubtedly it is not the same as speaking to a people one can see and count. This microphone makes me panic-stricken.

"I feel like a young priest about to preach his first sermon. What an experience!"

As the Pontiff began speaking his face relaxed, and after a few moments his voice adjusted itself to a natural tone. An occasional smile flitted across his lips; once or twice he glanced questioningly at Senator Marconi, as if to be assured that he was proving satisfactory.

BUTLER FLAYED BY VANDERBILT

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., today told his version of the Mussolini hit-run story for which Maj.-Gen. Smedley D. Butler was ordered to face court-martial, and asserted the anecdote would have "proved merely a squib compared to issues which testimony taking would have made public" had the court-martial not been called off.

Statements made by Butler, he said, concerned "failure of a foreign power to live up to the terms of the naval pact entered into last year between the United States, Great Britain and Japan."

Vanderbilt's story of the Mussolini incident was as follows:

"I was riding with Mussolini, who drove. A small child ran in front of the machine at a sharp curve in the road and was hit. I looked back to see if the child was hurt. Mussolini placed his hand on my knee and said, 'Never look back, Vanderbilt, always look ahead in life.'" and carry out his orders everywhere. No other language would be so widely understood.

The great Francis Bacon, as recently as Queen Elizabeth's time, wrote his chief work, the "Novum Organum," in Latin because he doubted the permanency of the English language and expected his work to outlive it.

His essays, to which he paid little attention, he wrote in English. Everybody reads the essays, nobody outside the learned class reads the "Novum Organum."

PROHIBITION AUTHORITIES, raiding five fraternity buildings of Michigan University, report they found liquor in every one of the buildings, in one case "14 quarts of whisky, four of gin, three of wine."

The amount of whisky and gin, as compared with wine, confirms the generally accepted idea that one result of prohibition has been to substitute the worst kind of alcoholic drink for the less harmful kinds.

Whisky is heavily alcoholic, easily concealed. Beer, the most temperate of the drinks, played a small part in the seizure.

THAT WOULD interest Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, who advised the legislature of Virginia to encourage light beer in place of the whisky that "kills one-third of our citizens and ruins their families."

Prohibition authorities will perhaps suggest that college fraternity houses be abolished in the interest of temperance. Young men would object to that.

DRY BILL LOSES IN BRITAIN

LONDON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—The House of Commons, by a vote of 137 to 18, today rejected the bill which would have prohibited the use of alcoholic liquors as beverages throughout the United Kingdom.

Lady Nancy Astor, Virginia's contribution to the British House of Commons, had members of that august body alternately laughing and gnashing when in a slashing and sometimes vitrolic speech, she made it clear that she is against liquor, but does not believe in tackling the problem in the way suggested in the bill introduced by Edwin Scrymgeour, prohibition member from Dundee, Scotland.

Lady Astor objected vigorously when the Conservative Sir William Wayland said Americans were drinking more under prohibition than before.

5 NEW CHARGES FACE BANKER

UNIONTOWN, Pa., Feb. 13.—Five additional informations charging misapplication of $100,000 of the funds of the Title and Trust Company of Western Pennsylvania, in Connellsville, of which he was president, were made today against Linford F. Ruth, of Washington, who recently was arrested on a similar charge in which $60,000 was involved.

Mr. Ruth gave bail of $20,000 after spending several days in custody of Fayette County authorities. He has returned home.

The sums represented in the informations made today grow out of alleged illegal discounting practices. The district attorney says that the informations were brought at the instance of J. D. Swigert, chief bank examiner.

Divorce Decree Wrecks Baroness' 3rd Marriage

CLEVELAND, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—A third marriage of Baroness Ally Von Schwartzenbarg was wrecked here today with a divorce decree from Common Pleas Court.

The decree was granted after the husband of the baroness, Dr. Edward Gault, of Cleveland, failed to answer her charges that he failed to support her and her five noble-born children.

It was the children who disgusted him with the marriage, the doctor said. They chided him, he said, on his not being "nobly born" and refused to go to work, declaring they were entitled to live "as noblemen should."

The Baroness said her sons tried to get work, but could not find jobs.

In the settlement of the suit, the Baroness was awarded numerous objects of art, including a painting which she said was an original Da Vinci, valued at $500,000, and alimony of $100 a month.

Dr. Gault was the second husband divorced by the Baroness. The other was a German officer. Her first husband, a Russian nobleman, died during the World War.

Walter Lauded for Fine Quality of Associated Artists Exhibition

By PENELOPE REDD.

The Associated Artists' twenty-first annual exhibition was opened with a Press View last night at Carnegie Institute.

The excellent show reflects the influence of Christian Walter, president, whose leadership has developed an organization of so professional a quality that the prize photographs were requested by air mail to make the press date of one of the leading art journals.

Mr. Walter, urged to express his opinion about the newly-born exhibition with its 392 items done by real painters, efficiency experts, pert debutantes, and every variation of "buckeye" artists, said:

Penelope Redd

"One cannot fail to discover that a brighter vision has permeated the exhibit of the Associated Artists.

"Perhaps this is the only tangible compensation for the efforts made to bring the world of art to our doors through the eclectic International exhibition.

"This broader vision has manifested itself in our membership. All who desire to paint may join. It would be difficult to find in any city another organization with such a diversified membership."

The group of prize winners well illustrates Mr. Walter's statement. Prize winners could not be more enthusiastic as individuals over their honors than are the current nine.

Mildred Floyd Schmertz, who was awarded the Carnegie Institute's prize of $250 for the best group, said with the joyous spontaneity characteristic of her painting:

"Never have I been so surprised. The award has given me courage to keep on painting, for it is not always easy with four small children. Just say I am shamelessly happy."

Raymond Simboli, more accustomed to prizes, was impersonally anxious to know if his painting held its own by test of gallery lighting. Of "A Pot of Fern," awarded the first honor, which carried with it a prize of $150, he said:

"I'm trying to free myself from too much conscious effort to draw and to work in the medium of paint as paint."

Joseph Myers, who won the second honor and prize of $100, was still incredulous. He said:

"I could not believe that I had even made the show, let alone win a high prize. I just managed to get my painting in seven minutes before the time limit for entering canvases. 'My First Lesson' is the portrait of a fellow I know, done as he played the accordion."

John Kucera, awarded third honor and the $50 prize for "Golden Rod," a splendid still life, studies at an art school in Philadelphia.

Louise Pershing regarded her $100 prize, contributed by the Art Society of Pittsburgh for the best portrait, with puckish elation. The portrait signally honored is that of Mrs. Little, an elderly lady of great dignity, admirably painted. Although commissioned, the portrait was refused as an unsatisfactory canvas. So Louise justifiably enjoys her award with a chuckle that the jury vouched for her artistic judgment.

Muriel Ward was like a small child overwhelmed with genuine amazement. No one had advised her that "Still Life" had been awarded the $25 prize sponsored by the alumnae of the former Pittsburgh School of Design for Women. She said:

William Shulgold's torso, "Nude," was given the Euphemia Bakewell prize of $50 for the best figure painting, while Sam Filner rated a similar sum with the print prize for his etched, self-portrait. Both have had previous awards.

The most prized of all the prizes, however, was indubitably the award of the Camilla Robb Russell Memorial prize in water color to "Saddle Mountain," in Mexico, by Dr. W. J. Holland.

Dr. Holland, who has received international honors beyond the average man's imagination, regards this prize, given solely on the painting's intrinsic merits, as one of the most cherished kudos.

And last but not least, the public may participate in the prize awards through the popular vote on the best flower painting. A. W. Smith, Jr., the donor, wearied of being approached and reapproached for the previous awards, hence the decision to place the onus on the public.

The exhibition continues through March 12.

Alma Rubens' Neglect of Phone Call Gave Gloria Swanson Her Chance

De Mille Chose Her For Part, Then Gave It To Other Girl

By ALMA RUBENS.

CHAPTER XIII.

A month later I was again back at work on the Triangle lots, none the worse for my sad marital experience, but, perhaps, a little wiser.

Three months afterward I met Dr. Daniel C. Goodman, then about 40, and whom I married after a long courtship.

Goodman was then head of Triangle's story department, having given up a remunerative practice in St. Louis because of his fancy for the movie lots.

But for an unfortunate occurrence I might have been now in the position on the screen occupied by Gloria Swanson. And, perhaps, if I hadn't missed my golden opportunity, I might never have married Dr. Goodman, or acquired the drug habit.

Miss Rubens

Of course, there is no use crying over spilled milk, but I simply must tell my greatest regretted "it might have been."

I had just been cast with William Desmond and was four days advanced on the picture when Cecil de Mille, who "discovered" Gloria, and carried her up the ladder to riches and fame, telephoned, asking that I call at his office for an interview.

I was so busy on the picture that it was not until two days later that I found time to answer the summons. And in the meantime, he had seen and talked with Gloria, with the result that he signed her up on a long contract.

Afterwards, I heard from an intimate of the great director, that he had been impressed with my ability and that he really had wanted me instead of Gloria, but hadn't seen fit to pursue me when I had failed to respond immediately.

Shortly after this I was introduced to Dr. Goodman, who liked me at once and invited me to accompany him to a party. He saw me home that evening and became my regular attendant.

Called to New York

Then he resigned from Triangle to accept a better position with Pathe, in New York. And before he had been there a month, I received an offer from them, through Dr. Goodman, to go to New York to play in "a picture of my own."

I was tickled silly. I danced and pranced around the house that evening until I almost drove my parents to distraction. My father was ill in bed, a little worse than usual, but we didn't realize how dangerously ill he was.

Both father and mother were anxious to have me get every possible advantage, but, of course, were reluctant to have me travel such a long distance from home. I convinced them, however, that it was necessary, and I telegraphed Dr. Goodman my acceptance.

Then began the hectic ceremony of shopping in preparation for the five-day trip. I spent almost the entire day before I was scheduled to leave down in town, making most of my purchases in the 5-and-10-cent stores. This was necessary, because of my limited capital. Dr. Goodman had sent me my railroad ticket, but nothing more, and I was afraid to wire for an advance for fear they would cancel their offer.

As I neared home I was suddenly struck with a premonition that something was wrong. I don't know how to describe the feeling, but my nerves tingled, my heart began to palpitate and I became faint.

I arrived just in time to meet our family doctor coming out. I knew he must have come to see my father and dreaded the worst.

"How is he?" I gasped.

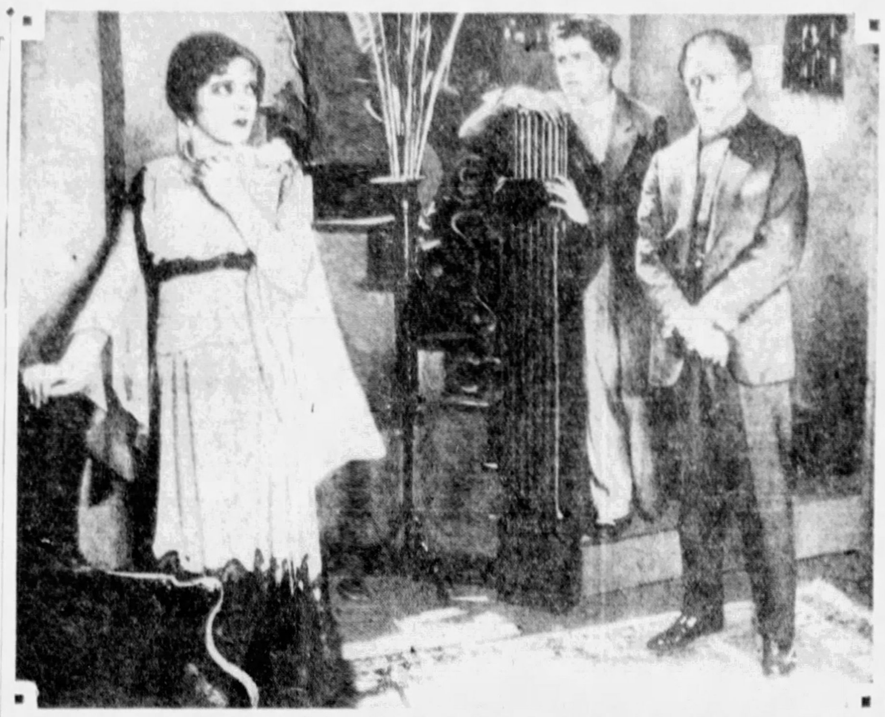
"Oh, he'll get along all right," reassured the doctor. "He's just had an extra bad pain. It is not dangerous. So don't look so worried."

Tragedy Came

I knew that he must be wrong, I dashed up the steps to father's room. The moment that I saw him, the thought struck me that he was dying. His face was pallid. His eyes seemed dimmed. Perspiration stood in little beads on his forehead. His hands clasped and unclasped nervously outside the coverlet.

My mother stood by the side of the bed. She cautioned me to remain silent; that papa was asleep. I just stood there, knowing, sensing that he was going, but in view of what the doctor had said, hoping against hope that my premonition was without foundation.

And, an instant later, my father awakened. When he saw me he smiled—a wan smile, a deathly smile that confirmed my suspicions.



ALMA RUBENS IN ONE OF HER EARLY PICTURES: "MARRIAGE LICENSE" REMEMBER?

"Alma, Baby," he called, stretching out his arms to me.

I dashed to the bedside and dropped to my knees. I threw my arms around him and an instant later he was dead.

He died right there in my arms!

It was all over in an instant. I was completely crushed. My mother knelt beside me with her arms around me and we both wept until our tear wells were dry.

When the funeral was over and my dear old father buried, I resumed preparations for my trip to New York—and collapsed. My nerves were entirely shattered. It required a month's treatment before the doctor would allow me to start East.

My mother put me on the train. I had only one suitcase. One little traveling suit and one little hat. She cautioned me to beware of strange men that tried to talk to me on the way. She said I should have nothing to do with them, no matter how nice or friendly they appeared.

I had an upper berth because it was cheaper. I had never traveled before except on my one trouper's tour—nearly all short jumps. On the second day out from Los Angeles I became violently ill. Train sickness.

The man who occupied the berth under me, changed with me. He talked to me like I was a little girl. He reminded me so much of my father that I paid not heed to my mother's warning and he kept me company, entertaining me with magazines and jokes all the way to Chicago.

I had very little money and ate but two meals a day in the diner. My friend many times urged me to accompany him to dinner, or lunch, but I was too prudish to accept.

Everyone Kind

Occasionally a traveling salesman—or a drummer as we always called them—would try to flirt with me. But I would not notice them. On the whole, everybody was awfully kind to me all the way.

In Chicago I had to wait four hours for my train connection. I sat the whole time in one seat in the station, my shabby little pasteboard suitcase beside me, and shivering with apprehension.

I had read stories of white slavery, and I was taking no chances.

When I arrived in New York at the Grand Central, it was snowing and blowing and the streets were dark and dreary. Dr. Goodman met me and took to the Commodore Hotel.

After he had taken me to my room and I took off my coat, his first remark almost floored me.

"Havens!" he said. "You can't wear an outfit like that!"

Then he laughed.

I looked myself over, and, finally, I laughed, too. My little suit was a cheap little affair with long black sleeves. I had altered them to make them even longer, snaky appearing things that I had thought would make me look like a vampire.

I suppose I must have been thinking of Theda Bara, whom I had long admired, and felt that if I could adopt a little of her personality I'd make a hit on Broadway.

Dr. Goodman's reception somewhat dampened my aspirations along that line, however. Especially when he said Pathe had given him money to buy me a complete new wardrobe.

I bought an entire outfit, modish and expensive, before we went to the Pathe offices where I was to sign a contract to play the leading role in "Thoughtless Women," with a salary of $100 a week.

$100 a Week

Gee! I couldn't believe it. One hundred dollars a week. For days and days I pinched myself until I was black and blue, believing I was in the midst of a pleasant dream.

My first thought after being handed my initial salary was to save so I could send for my mother. I liked Dr. Goodman a great deal. He was the first man with whom I had come in contact that had failed to get familiar. I adored him for that. But, despite his kindness and his efforts to keep me happy, I longed for my mother.

Her arrival soon after I finished my first picture in the East, was one of the happiest days in my life. She too liked Dr. Goodman. He was a quiet, studious sort of chap. He talked of things that enchanted me. And he taught me things that I really wanted to know and appreciated.

I read my first real love novel, "Virgin Soil," at his request. I was so enamored with it—I never had read anything but the cheapest trash in the past—that I clamored for more. After that I devoured book after book, written by the best fiction writers. Dr. Goodman always counseling me in their selection.

Then came that great day of days, that on which I signed my first real contract as a "star." And, at a thousand a week!

(Universal Service Correspondent Aboard the U. S. S. Los Angeles.)

ABOARD THE U. S. S. LOS ANGELES, Feb. 13.—The Los Angeles is bound to the stub mast of the U. S. S. Patoka today after a day of aerial sight-seeing for a distinguished party of Americans and Panamans.

All day the huge dirigible cruised over Panama and the canal, giving its guests the thrill of viewing from above their country and the slender ribbon of water that unites the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Among those aboard when the Navy's airship left the Patoka moorings yesterday at 8:45 a. m., were U. S. Minister Roy T. Davis; Dr. Vallarino, Panama's foreign minister; Francisco Arias, minister of justice; Harmodio Arias, former provisional president, and Secretaries to the American Legation George Merrel and Howard Bucknell.

The Los Angeles first took its passengers over Colon and Cristobal, thence cruised along the coast to the Gulf of Parita, midway between Balboa and Cape Mala.

PLAN NIGHT BAN ON CHILD JOBS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Operators of 70 per cent of the country's cotton mills have agreed to do away with night work for women and children on March 1, if 5 per cent more of the mill-owners will join them.

This word was taken to President Hoover yesterday by George A. Sloan, of New York, head of the Cotton Textile Institute, who added his organization's hope and belief that gaining the additional number of supporters was assured.

After the White House conference, in which Secretary Lamont took part, Sloan issued a statement saying dropping night work for the women and children would not cause any serious dislocation of labor, as all has been prepared for the change. He said the President had offered sympathetic support for the movement.

Elimination of this night work has had the aid of the government's trade aid groups since it first was advanced.

Sloan reported conditions in the cotton manufacturing industry had improved considerably with sales of yarn and cloth for the first six weeks of the year 20 per cent in excess of production.

Chinese May Turn To Gold Standard

SHANGHAI, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—Finance Minister Soong, of the Central government, announced here that the Nanking government is ready to take energetic steps to adopt the gold standard. It will be the opening program in a campaign to readjust China financially.

500 Turkish Rebels Face Death Trials

ISTANBUL, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—Another group of the 500 religious agitators arrested in connection with recent disorders at Menemen will shortly be court-martialed, with death penalties likely. Twenty-eight others have already been hanged.

Waif Made Home In Subway for 18 Months

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—A red-headed waif whose past is a blank, even to himself, told a magistrate he had lived in New York's subways 18 months.

A patrolman found 16-year-old "Patsy O'Brien" sitting on a sidewalk in rags. Taken before a magistrate, he said all he remembered of his home life was that he had one or more brothers and lived somewhere in midtown. He couldn't even say whether the name he used was his real one.

For 18 months, he declared, he had been homeless and had paid his "hotel bill" with a nickel he received daily from officials of a bread line.

FEBRUARY SAVINGS SALE

Beginning Tomorrow— Store-Wide Event Including the Downstairs Store

We're fairly panting with news of this Sale. And, mind you, we're not a bit more excited than you'll be when you see the goods. For here is more merchandise, better selections, and lower prices than ever before. Think of it, Boys' Two-Knicker Suits, tailored of fine worsted, priced at $10. Spring Millinery of which we have never seen the like at $2.50 and $4.50. The best looking Lamps with tailored Shades, complete for $4.95. And a choice of eight 1931 standard make Radios at—imagine, $79!

We built this Sale on a structure of commonsense. The Men's Suits, for instance, are tailored of year 'round weight fabrics, the kind you can wear right now and on until July. (Don't miss seeing those Grey Suits at $28.50, by the way.) The Women's Coats ($29.75) are advance fashions, in weights for immediate wear. Everything is fresh and new and beautiful.

Prices have receded, everybody knows that. But in your fondest dream you couldn't expect to find such values and smartness linked with the prices you'll find here tomorrow. And remember, a charming dress may do more than a bottle of medicine for the woman, and fresh new curtains (tailored Marquisette at $1.00 a pair, if you please,) can make her think the sun is shining. It will do your heart good to spend tomorrow at Gimbels. While the Sale will last until a week from tomorrow, plan by all means to come tomorrow for despite utmost care in judging quantities, some of the values will be early "sell outs."

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 13 (AP)—Machine gun fire was fatal yesterday for Jimmy Howard, known to police as a gangster and liquor runner.

A few hours after Howard was wounded by nearly a dozen bullets, police, acting on a tip, arrested 17 men in the rear room of a flower shop.

Howard fell before the bullets of a machine gunner who descended from a motor car, fired through the plate glass window of the A. B. C. Auto Livery office, and then returned to the automobile to disappear with two of three companions.

James Rainwater, one of the owners of the livery company, was with Howard in the office. He fell to the floor and escaped uninjured. Rainwater said Howard had no connection with the taxi company. Lewis M. Siegfried, chief of police, said the victim formerly was a member of Egan's Rats, a St. Louis gang.

'NUMBER' BOOKS USING DICE

While the "numbers" racket still rocked today with the confusion into which it was thrown when privately computed totals of daily sales on the New York Stock Exchange disagreed several times in succession, two of the Hill districts' Three Wise Men announced today that they would use 10-sided dice again as a basis for their racket.

The change marked their decision to wait before picking a permanent basis for their racket rather than simply as they have done before at a number that looks better than it is. No change will be made, it is reported, until they find a statistic upon which the entire Pittsburgh racket can unite.

One person described the dice-throwing this way:

"In a little room in the Hill district there are three 10-sided dice in a reversible cage. At 11 a. m., a crowd gathers to see the 'number' made. Someone from the audience is chosen to turn the cage on its axle. When the dice settle, the three numbers showing on top make the day's number. If it's a 'bad number,' the crowd is likely to push against the cage, 'accidentally' throwing the dice off balance and necessitating a new throw."

LANGDON TO SUE THEFT ACCUSER

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 13.—(AP)—John Bowen, attorney for Harry Langdon, film comedian, said a civil action for false arrest and prosecution and asking damages of $500,000 would be filed today against James P. Dickason, Beverly Hills real estate operator, Bowen said.

"The suit would be based upon the arrest and prosecution of Mr. Langdon by Dickason for the alleged theft of property from a house which Langdon had made arrangements to purchase."

Langdon and his wife, Helene Walton Langdon, former actress, were acquitted.

Bowen said:

"There may be some other grounds in the suit and Mrs. Langdon may be a co-complainant, but this has not been determined."

The film couple was accused by Dickason of taking fixtures and supplies from a Beverly Hills home on which they had made a down payment of $1,000. The Beverly Hills justice court decided yesterday the property belonged to them. A suit by Dickason to force them to move is pending.

Honored Chicago Priest Dies at 70

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—(INS)—The Very Rev. Francis Gordon, C. R., died this morning in St. Mary's of Nazareth Hospital. He was 70.

In addition to his church duties, he was publisher of the Polish Daily News in Chicago. Cardinal Mundelein had designated him as "one of America's foremost and most useful clergymen." He was decorated by Pope Pius XI in 1924.

Tonsil Operation Kills Famous Dog

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—(AP)—Klodo Von Boxberg is dead. Klodo, described by his admirers as one of the most aristocratic police dogs in the world, died yesterday following an operation for removal of his tonsils. Mexican Insurgent Resumes His Raids

GUADALAJARA, Mexico, Feb. 13.—(AP)—Reports from Cocula, Jalisco, says the former rebel leader, Jesus Gonzalez, has again risen in arms and with 15 followers is looting the countryside.

Gonzalez was prominent as a rebel during the three-year "Christero" rebellion, which ended in 1929, with settlement of the church-state dispute.

Child Strangled While at Play

DETROIT, Feb. 13.—(AP)—Playing a strange game of her own devising, Eleanor Gangler, 11, strangled herself accidentally in the kitchen of her home yesterday with a roller towel.

Her sister, Irene, 8, said Eleanor placed one end of the towel about her neck, then spun around. As she turned, the towel drew tighter around her neck, strangling her.

Bribe Offer Charged To Utilities Counsel

MADISON, Wis., Feb. 13.—(AP)—State Senator P. J. Smith, of Eau Claire, last night testified before a special Senate investigating committee that Attorney Paul H. Raihle, counsel for a utilities company and former assemblyman, promised to raise money for him "if things went right" with two pending utilities bills.

The testimony was taken in an open hearing after Gov. Philip La Follette yesterday sent a message to the Legislature stating he had reason to believe there had been attempted bribery.

BIG BILL 'WOWS' CHICAGO WITH HIS CIRCUS

Campaign Extravaganza at 25 Cents a Head Dwarfs Foe's Machine Gun Show

By CHARLOTTE WEBB,
Universal Service.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13. — Chicago's flair for doing things in a spectacular way reached its climax this week when "Big Bill" Thompson's circus came to town, complete from 6,000 pound elephant to clowns, trained poodles and a host of chattering monkeys.

If "Big Bill's" chief rival, Municipal Judge Lyle, at first gripped the public imagination by waving about a borrowed machine gun and loudly denouncing "public enemies"—none of whom he ever jailed—Thompson's circus has "wow'd 'em," as they say in the show business.

Since its opening last Monday afternoon, thousands of Chicagoans have yielded to the blaring posters and raucous spiels of barkers outside the Cort Theater to:

"Spend 25 cents! See 10 great acts of vaudeville and learn the real issues of this campaign! Spend 25 cents—the fawth part of one doll-uh!"

BEER FEATURES TALKIE

A talkie of Mayor Thompson and a travelogue through Chicago districts improved under Thompson regimes, open the show. The latter film, entitled "Chicago—Home of Thompsonism" pictures street-widening projects, new bridges, and the straightening of the Chicago River. It ends with a scene in an old-fashioned beer dispensary with the bartender working at top speed, pushing the schooners across the twinkling mahogany. With this scene Big Bill's voice booms forth a promise to work for the return of good, wholesome beer, and the crowds applaud rapturously.

Tumblers, trapeze artists, waltzing poodles, prancing Shetland ponies, with monkeys scrambling about the scenery, relax the audience for the next political act. In this, three characters representing the leading contenders for the Republican mayoral candidacy, ride forth upon the stage and engage in lusty repartee concerning their respective qualifications.

RIVALS SATIRIZED

First in line appears a cherubic youth about 12 years old, almost hidden beneath a black derby, and perched atop a shaggy, sleepy little burro. The animal is led by a seedy-looking individual bearing upon his back a placard reading: "Chicago Daily News." In his hand he holds one end of a rope leading to a halter about the youth's neck, emblematic of the control which "Big Bill" charges, the newspaper exercises upon "Little Arthur" Albert, Deneen candidate.

Second of the trio is "The Judge"—pale, slightly bitter as to expression, and given to threatening his audience with high bonds if they don't stop snickering. The Judge's bony, swayback mule is guided by a slightly cadaverous gentleman whose sagging shoulders carry the banner of "The Chicago Tribune." He, too, holds the rope of a halter about the Judge's neck; for, Big Bill charges, Municipal Judge Lyle is the Tribune's candidate, body and soul.

ENTER 'BIG BILL'

Finally, upon a handsome black charger, in canters the figure of "Big Bill" himself—a husky six-footer, in cowboy regalia, puffing a black cigar and waving his 10-gallon hat to the crowd.

As they face the audience, "Little Arthur" pipes up shrilly:

"I want to be mayor! I'm against Big Bill and everything he's done—but I don't care! I know he reduced milk 1 cent a quart—but I don't care! I know he widened the boulevards and built bridges and increased land values—but I don't care!"

Whereat Big Bill guffaws heartily, jerks a thumb at the youth and remarks jovially to his audience:

"Why, he must have been running around with Eva Tanguay when she wrote that song, 'I Don't Care.'"

The Judge thereupon declares in ringing tones:

"I want to be mayor. I've rid the city of all its crooks!"

Big Bill then turns slightly in his saddle and inquires:

"You have? Well, where are the crooks?"

"Why—they're with the politicians!"

"And where are the politicians, Judge?"

"Why! They're with me!"

ROUGH HUMOR

A mixture of rough humor with piercing barbs of satire and sarcasm, streaked broadly with ridicule of Big Bill's opponents, this act invariably "rolls 'em in the aisles."

In fact, during the two parades which the entire show makes daily through the loop district, "Little Arthur," "The Judge" and "Big Bill" draw the biggest grins, the lion's share of attention.

Out of deference to her age and sex, Nana, the show's pachyderm prima donna, leads the way from beneath a huge sign inscribed:

"Stamp prohibition out of the G. O. P. Vote for William Hale Thompson, February 24th."

Behind Nana walks a shaggy, supercilious camel with a sign of his own reading:

"I can go eight days without a drink—but who the h—— wants to be a camel?"

Calliopes going full blast, Indians and cowboys, clowns, old-time circus wagons drawn by beplumed Shetland ponies, complete the cavalcade that struck its beholders dumb with incredulity the day of its unheralded debut. Gradually, however, the faces of onlookers widened with amazed comprehension, then relaxed in broadening grins that gave way at last to loud laughter as they read the placards on the beasts and took in the burro-mule-horse parade of the "candidates."

STRENUOUS SCHEDULE

Besides Mayor Thompson's program of personal appearances before packed theaters, with thousands outside listening to his words from loudspeakers, his circus has moved into the Cort until election day, with the strenuous schedule of six two-hour performances from noon to midnight.

The recent trend of popular sentiment may perhaps be judged by the fact that the day Judge Lyle orated at his fiercest best and waved about his borrowed machine gun at a nearby theater, the circus drew its biggest audience—at 25 cents a head.

And meanwhile, the entire city is enjoying the show of its life!

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Davy Jones has a few more cases of liquor for his locker, in the hold of a trim little motorboat sunk in collision with a submerged wreck off New Jersey while hotly pursued by a Coast Guard cutter.

The ship, on whose prow was the name "Mayo," was scooting out of the Raritan River when the patrol boat CG-2922, chief Boatswain's Mate John Carlson commanding, espied her, giving chase.

The federal crew saved the Mayo's two crewmen from drowning and fished from the sea some bottled whisky in sacks for evidence. The chaser crew said the prisoners declared the craft had 75 cases aboard.

CHAPLIN TALKS AT SING SING

OSSINING, N. Y., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Charlie Chaplin, who turned down a $650,000 offer for talking over the radio, made a speech for nothing in the "Big House" last night. And he came at his own expense from New York to talk to the Sing Sing convicts.

He spoke after his pantomime picture, "City Lights," had been shown to 1,800 convicts—all who could get into the amusement hall. Laughter shook the auditorium during the performance. When the showing of the film was ended, he left the warden's box to speak from the platform. He said:

"Sometimes I wonder if my profession is worth while. But after seeing your reaction, I feel it is. If I afford you any happiness and relaxation I feel well repaid for coming up here."

Chaplin promised to come again with his next cinema.

67 CITIES TOP CHICAGO IN CRIME

'Known Offenses' Compiled By Statistician Contradict Bad Name of Illinois Town

Universal Service.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—Sixty-seven cities of the United States, with a population of over 100,000, have more crime than Chicago.

The foregoing is revealed from an exhaustive tabulation of "known offenses" prepared by Frederick Rex, head of the Municipal Reference Library. The table is based on figures compiled by the bureau of investigation of the United States Department of Justice and published on pages 6-7 of the federal pamphlet entitled "Uniform Crime Reports," dated September, 1930. The figures cover the nine-month period ended September 30, 1930.

ONLY 13 LOWER

The Rex table shows that of the 81 cities listed there are only 13 cities which have a lower ratio of known crimes and offenses for each 10,000 of their population than has the city of Chicago, namely, Rochester, N. Y.; Richmond, Va.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Paterson, N. J.; Lynn, Mass.; St. Paul, Minn.; Fall River, Mass.; Lowell, Mass.; New Bedford, Mass.; Evansville, Ind.; Peoria, Ill.; Jersey City, N. J., and Tampa, Fla.

The number of known offenses included in this compilation are: Murder and non-negligent manslaughter, manslaughter by negligence, statutory, robbery, assault, burglary, larceny and auto theft.

DATA SUPPLIED

The federal pamphlet referred to does not give the number of offenses reported in Chicago for aggravated assault, statutory and larceny for the nine-month period ending September 30, 1930. The totals for the three last named offenses for the first nine months of 1930 have since been supplied by the Chicago police department, and are included in the total of Chicago "known offenses." The Rex table follows:

Rank	City (a)	Population (U. S. Census of 1930)	Murder and non-negligent manslaughter	Manslaughter by negligence	Robbery	Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Auto theft	Total known offenses	Ratio to 10,000 population

Lesson No. 2 of W. Scott Grove's Course in Piano Playing

PIANO LESSONS

Sunday, February 8th, the Sun-Telegraph will publish the second lesson of the W. Scott Grove Course in Piano Playing. This course is so simple that any child can, by its aid, be started on the way to proficiency on the piano or organ. The fundamental principles in music must first be mastered . . . that is essential. The Music Simplifier Course in Piano Playing teaches the fundamental principles in the easiest and simplest manner possible. It makes the learning a pleasure study by making it fascinating. You know at all times what you are doing, why you are doing it, and what progress you are making.

The author of the plan believes that any person will reach the point where he can play simple popular music, and if he wants to get beyond that, and in all probability he will, Pittsburgh instruction offers the best possible training.

Each lesson will be printed one time only. Remember there are 24 of them. Lesson 2 Sunday, Feb. 8th. Preceding copies of these lessons can be procured from the Circulation Dept.

A. S. Keller, manager of the industrial division of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, will be the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board next Tuesday in the blue room of the William Penn Hotel. Keller's subject will be "Bringing New Industries to Pittsburgh." J. W. Cree, Jr., president of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association and past president of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, addressed the annual banquet of Reading Real Estate Board last night. Cree's talk dealt with legislation in regard to taxation and stressed the work now being done by the state association in bringing about a better system of taxing real estate.

The Loudspeaker

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Not that it matters but when idle senility finally overtakes us we shall begin our long-delayed plans of tabulating the number of times the word "love" has appeared in the titles of Broadway songs.

The most seductive love song of the past three seasons, in my opinion, is Cole Porter's "What Is This Thing Called Love?"

I have reached the point where I am no longer charmed by gypsy ballads.

Incidental music, it seems to me, would aid the appeal of 75 per cent of the talks heard on the radio.

Only once, and no more, have I heard United States senators facetious on the microphone. The occasion was a debate on the high cost of broadcasting between Pat Harrison and George H. Moses.

Only twice, and no more, have I heard the shrill accents of the rebel yell on the air. The occasions were a speech by ex-Senator Reed, of Missouri, at the Sedalia (Mo.) fair grounds and an attack on Hoover by Senator Glass in Richmond, Va.

I still adhere to my practice of keeping a revolver well loaded for the first guest who bursts upon any party of mine with the salutation: "Heigh ho, everybody."

Whenever the heebie-jeebies overtake me I invariably ask my man to turn the dial to the English country dances of Percy Grainger.

I have surrendered all hope of ever hearing the Hon. J. Thomas Heflin on the microphones.

Radio drama still has a long road to travel before it sends me panting to the armchairs.

The height of patriotism to me is expressed by those listeners who rise to their feet in the privacy of their homes when the service bands sound the "Star Spangled Banner."

I have never had any desire to learn the intricacies of the tango chiefly because of an inability to tie a sash.

Of all unwhistleable tunes ever written, none, I am more and more convinced has ever attained the popularity of "The Peanut Vendor."

Whenever I am confronted with a sigh for a greater sophistication in radio I take refuge in the knowledge that the microphone has yet to voice the shop-worn bones on marriage and mothers-in-law.

Because of its repetition on the air Lizst's "Libestraum" no longer brings that far away look to the eyes of my charmers.

I have yet to tire of any waltz that Johann Strauss wrote.

Were Victor Herbert alive today he would be, I am certain, the foremost figure in the realm of broadcasting.

I am still unable to repress a homicidal impulse whenever my ears catch heavy-sugared Broadway troubadours airing the vagabond nature of love.

It is still a matter of wonder to me why the broadcasters do not change the time of the Slumber hour to those periodic discussions of naval parity.

When a mood of crystal-gazing steals over me it is my custom to predict that Sir Harry Lauder's broadcast fee of $15,000 for a half hour will stand until Fritz Kreisler surrenders to radio.

For sheer glow and ardor the eulogies paid to Byrd on the radio will never be surpassed, not even by the publication of a French funeral orator's textbook.

CONNELLY, FILM ACTOR, DIES

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 13 (AP)—Erwin Connelly, 50, veteran motion picture actor, died yesterday from a skull fracture and internal injuries suffered in an automobile accident Wednesday.

The accident occurred when Connelly's chauffeur, Chung Wing, 28, lost control of the car on a steep grade. Wing was not injured.

Connelly was born in Chicago and graduated from the University of Chicago. His early experience was gained in stock shows and some years ago he entered motion pictures, playing small parts. During recent years he took character roles in several prominent films.

LIBERTY TUBE WORK URGED

Immediate action on 10 proposed improvements for the Liberty Tubes is asked in a letter from the business activity committee of the Pittsburgh Motor Club to the County Commissioners. Eight of the proposals were submitted to the Commissioners several months ago by Director Norman E. Bell of the County Department of Public Works, and C. A. Ingles, Port Authority engineer.

The improvements, estimated to cost approximately $87,440, include publicity for the tubes, traffic signals, a traffic policeman for each of the two toll booths, a machine to give out change, fans when the tubes become dangerous and a ventilating system, lighting of the tubes, and a traffic officer to keep all vehicles moving at a speed not exceeding 25 miles an hour. The tubes have been closed to traffic for periods totaling 1,000 hours.

Buck Deer Kills Dog Attacking Doe, Fawn

NEW PHILADELPHIA, O., Feb. 13—A dog belonging to C. A. Murphy, near Gnadenhutten, was trampled to death by a 200-pound buck deer as it protected its doe and fawn in the woods on George Capp's farm near Gilmore when it attacked, it is believed, the mother deer and a fawn.

WALTER WINCHELL On Broadway

(Copyright, 1931, Daily Mirror, Inc.)

Call Me Up Some Time

Perhaps I shall be busier this week,
Less time for foolish wonder and surprise
With whom you're laughing and to whom you speak,
On whom you turn the darkness of your eyes.

I'll have a lot of little things to do
Run, feet, and carry me to crowded places,
There must be more delightful men than you,
There must be magic in some other faces.

You wouldn't have me sit here like a child,
Face to the doorway, piteous and good
Never a thought that was not sweet and mild,
Echo, the slattern, answers "Yes, he would!"

Listening for hours for your special knock;
Thinking I hear downstairs your eager shout;
Watching the creeping fingers of my clock
Where is my lipstick I'm going out.

—Elspeth.

High Blonde Pressure

One woman who stopped a clock is Ruth Gentlemen Prefer Blondes Taylor, the former movie actress, who now is Mrs. Paul Zuckerman. Her husband is a wealthy Wall Streeter. In their house on the living room mantel stands a clock that always reads "8.35." It is never wound and the servants have strict orders not to move its hands which are set at exactly the hour when he first laid eyes on the blonde lass who now is his wife.

Love, as the saying goes, never killed anybody but one whose time has come. However, it is Love that makes us go around with that pained expression.

Heheheh

A contribution to the Department for Scotch Gags deals with the ailing Scotsman who went to his Scot doctor.

"What should I o do," he asked, "for a sprained ankle?"

"Limp!" was the snapper.

The Squelch Swelegant

And from another clown comes the one about the bore who was telling about his baby car and how it went into flames on a lonely road far from help.

"There was I," the long-winded talker was chirping, "miles from anybody with a blazing machine. What do you think I did?"

To which a weary listener replied: "You took a deep breath and blew it out."

He Begged For It

B. A. Rolfe, the orchestra director and champ horn-tooter, will never forget that day when the Chelsea Bank in New York tottered. He was on his way there to make a heavy deposit and the run was on. He never suspected it, however, when he saw the crowds lined up in front of the bank. He is an impatient chap, this Rolfe person, so he dashed across the way to a stationery shop, purchased a large envelope into which he placed his coin.

Then he dropped it into the bank's night slot.

"That's beating the line, isn't it?" he boasted to his chauffeur.

Then Came The Dawn.

Sob Story

"Dear Winchell," passionately writes Steve McCarthy, "things are really tough these days. A friend of mine says that when he enters his home at night the roaches limp out of the icebox and look at him with tears in their eyes."

A Garland for Garland

Add Things I Wish I Had Written:

"But Mr. Chaplin is, as always, the immortal misfit. He is, to be brazen about it, you and I. As a matter of fact, he is mankind. So friendly, so hopeful, so inspired an opportunist, he is enough to break your heart in two. If I were God I'd be nice to him. For he smiles and twirls his cane and is decent with everything against him. From the Bronx to Tokio, from Sydney to San Francisco, he is a symbol. He is a symbol of the man God made in his own image—and man improved upon.—Robert Garland."

In Other Words

And I. "Rodenberg wants to make up a sentence containing the word: "Cimarron" like this:

"What's the matter with Joe, I never cimmarron anymore?"

The Morning Mail

"Dear Winchell," writes Paul Lipner of Pittsburgh, "you can call this 'I don't Like New York' as an answer to your recent column titled: 'I happen To Like New York.' You say there is only one Jimmy Durante and he's in your town. That there is only one Palace audience; and you rave about that stretch from Forty-second to Fifty-ninth streets on Fifth avenue on a rainy night, etc. Yeah: But you are careful not to mention all the cartoon monoxide you can get up your nose in that same area, eh, wot? Why don't you tell of the manners of the subway riders, how they push, jam, and kick to beat you to the door or seat? And, oh, so many disgusting habits of you New Yorkers?"

Look before you Lipner.

First-Night Glossary

Dramatic: An adjective used to describe a scene in which anything, from a vase to the Seventh Commandment, is broken . . . Gag

Among others on Broadway whose dialects have captured the fancy of the "Anything For a Laugh" brigade is Fred Fisher, song writer, whose numbers have made millions hum, whistle, sing or dance. Fisher was among those who went to Hollywood during the theme song vogue. His first assignment was to write some incidental tunes for a flicker.

One of the scenes proved so tense and so compelling Fisher became emotional.

"It is warweluss!" he ejaculated, "seemply grend! It should be accompanied by a symphony—do you hear me—a symphony!"

Then in the next breath he added:

"Boy—bring me a pencil!"

Mrs. Louise H. Colt, formerly of Reddour street, testified her husband had beaten her with a blacksnake whip, in her divorce case against Walter S. Colt, Arch street. The divorce was granted by Judge James H. Gray.

She was 17 and attending Allegheny High School when she married Colt May 12, 1923. She left him in May, 1929. She testified:

TEMBLOR JOLTS STRICKEN AREA

By F. W. SIMMONDS
International News Service.

WELLINGTON, N. Z., Feb. 13.—A short but terrific earthshock of much greater force than that which devastated Napier and Hastings last week jarred the whole of New Zealand at 1:28 p. m. today (9:28 p. m. Thursday, eastern standard time).

The temblor raced along the ocean floor and shook the Chatham Islands, several hundred miles out in the Pacific Ocean east of here.

The violent tremor, climaxing a series of minor earth vibrations that so far centered around Napier and Hastings on North Island, spread fresh fear and terror through New Zealand.

Dunedin, on South Island, reported some damage to property.

An ominous silence isolated Waipukurau, North Island town, which suffered extensively in the previous disaster.

100 OVERCOME FIGHTING FIRE

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—With 48 firemen, including three battalion chiefs, in hospitals and many more recovering from smoke and gas poisoning after receiving first aid, a five-hour fire was extinguished this morning.

Smoke and carbon monoxide gas formed when water came in contact with burning oil in the basement of the building, dropped firemen by the scores. Even those with gas masks were overcome almost as rapidly as those without. More than 100 firemen were affected.

Emergency first-aid stations were set up near the fire by nurses and internes and ambulances kept up steady runs to and from hospitals.

Spectators aided surviving firemen to rescue those who were overcome. Three firemen returned to duty after being treated, only to be felled again by the fumes.

Damage was estimated at $20,000.

BROWN SCORES LEASE CHARGES

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Senator Blaine (Rep.), of Wisconsin, stood charged today by Postmaster General Brown with a deliberate attempt to deceive the American public into believing there had been widespread fraud in making leases for postal buildings.

Brown engaged in a sharp clash with Blaine two days ago when the latter, as chairman of the Senate Postal Lease Investigating Committee, sought to obtain some department records, which the witness refused to produce.

The Postmaster General denied in a formal statement last night that postal lease beneficiaries had made heavy contributions to the Coolidge and Hoover campaign funds, asserting, on the contrary, that though they numbered thousands, they had contributed but $500 to Republican funds since 1924.

Talks Greek to Show He's Sober, Freed

LONDON, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—Knowledge of the Greek language proved an unexpected aid to a banker and former army officer here. Arraigned before the court on charge of driving a car while under the influence of liquor, the defendant was freed when the court learned he recited Greek to arresting officers to prove he was not drunk. The court argued he could not have recited Greek in a befuddled state of mind.

Announcing for 1931 "the smartest thing in rubber"

Here is a close-up of the distinguishing mark of the new standard Goodyear All-Weather Tread Tire — the reinforcing rubber prisms which decorate the sidewall. So expressive of the new note in tire design is this Goodyear development, that Goodyear leadership in this respect is sure to be widely copied, as reflecting the outstanding characteristic of the 1931 tire mode

HERE, moderns, is the latest and by far the most efficient expression of the tire-building art to date.

It packs within its sleek and stout black circle the grandest combination of style and value your good money ever bought.

It is the new standard Goodyear All-Weather balloon, the improved 1931 edition of the most popular tire in the world.

Goodyear has too much at stake to offer it to you as something special unless it could make good generously on every advantage claimed.

Come look at this great tire; let your own eyes tell you how ruggedly handsome, how modern and clean-lined and smart it really is.

On the test cars, over sand, gravel, concrete and brick roads, it averaged 24% longer tread-wear than even the famous Goodyear it succeeds.

Literally, it is the finest-looking, greatest-performing money's worth of tire that ever went upon the highways under the Goodyear name.

The best news is left until last: it costs you not a cent extra to buy!

SIX IMPORTANT FEATURES

among the many that distinguish the new and improved standard Goodyear All-Weather Tread Tire:

1 Its center non-skid pattern is 10% deeper

2 Its shoulder non-skid pattern is 50% deeper

3 Riding ribs and outer non-skid blocks have outside bracing as on truck tires

4 Outer non-skid blocks are handsomely prismed into sidewalls

5 Cross sections are equal to Heavy Duty measurements

6 Styled to 1931 motor car design

BOARD STUDIES WAR PROFITS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(AP.) Four citizens, each of whom had a direct connection with the World War, will be called upon by the Commission to Remove War Profits next month to give their views on how the burdens of a future war could be distributed equitably among the American people.

Most prominent of those called upon to testify is Gen. John J. Pershing, who, though retired, still maintains a close contact with War Department and military affairs. Invitations to appear before the commission will be issued to Bernard Baruch, whom President Wilson called upon to head the War Industries Board; Paul Wolman, of Baltimore, Md., commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Ralph T. O'Neil, of Indianapolis, Ind., national commander of the American Legion.

Under the terms of the congressional resolution by which it was constituted, the commission must have in the hands of President Hoover a report of the gigantic subject of war profits and equal distribution by December.

W. Va. Legislators Study Prison Needs

MOUNDSVILLE, W. Va., Feb. 13.—The West Virginia state prison problem is to be thoroughly investigated today and tomorrow by a joint committee of the West Virginia Legislature. The delegation is headed by Senator George C. Beneke, of Wheeling.

Hyde Ridicules Insurgent Senators

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde departed from the prepared text of his Lincoln Day address last night to remark on politics in America.

He referred to an oration by a comedian named "Senator McGoof" and said:

"He'd make a corking good senator from Nebraska or Wisconsin.

He said Robert H. Lucas, executive director of the Republican National Committee, was a man "who has three speeds forward, thank God, and no reverse."

U. S. DRY RAIDS NET 35,687

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—Federal officers arrested 35,687 persons for violation of the prohibition laws between June 30 and February 1, the Department of Justice announced today.

In this period 12,451 stills, 31,658 beer fermenters, 4,430 automobiles, 4,605,057 gallons of beer and 894,449 gallons of alcoholic spirits were seized by the prohibition bureau.

There were 23,228 prohibition cases pending January 31, an increase of 502 during the seven months.

MAL DAUGHERTY TRIAL RESUMED

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, O., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—The process of introducing documentary evidence on which the state's case is based was continued today in the trial of Mal S. Daugherty, charged with abstraction of bank funds while he was president of the closed Ohio State Bank.

Tomorrow, John Perrill, a Fayette County farmer, is to be recalled to elaborate on his testimony that he signed two checks at Daugherty's request, but denied indorsing a note bearing his name. The note, the state claims, was part of Daugherty's alleged scheme for abstracting funds.

Daugherty, a brother of former United States Attorney General Harry Daugherty, is being tried on a charge of abstraction of $5,350. He faces 15 other indictments and the state charges his total abstractions amounted to more than $30,000.

Schall Says Mitchell 'Misled' President

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—(INS.)—Attorney General Mitchell was accused of "grossly misleading" President Hoover in his refusal to indorse Ernest Michel for appointment as a federal judge in Minnesota, in letters sent the White House today by Senator Schall (Rep.), of that state. The controversy between Schall and Mitchell was interrupted by Mr. Hoover's letter to Schall last week, in which he said he asked Schall to submit other candidates.

More and More Quality all the Time

There are many qualities that distinguish the Richman Brothers clothing manufacturing organization, but none like our constant, persistent, never ending efforts to improve our clothes.

Just when others congratulate us most for our remarkable quality and incomparable value . . . just then we are most dissatisfied with ourselves and already start planning to raise our standards higher.

Our customers are satisfied, but we never. We never stand still. We're always beginning or in the midst of another step forward. We cannot help it. That is the way we are constituted.

Season after season, year after year, we buy finer woolens; we improve the tailoring; we use better linings; we discover a better way to make buttonholes; we introduce a new and better linen canvas front; we don't overlook even the buttons or the thread.

That's why when we say Richman Brothers Clothes are the greatest values we've tailored in 52 years, it means just what we say, for our clothes represent 52 years of constant, sincere and painstaking improvement.

MUSIC

Capital Uuiversity Glee Club

Carnegie Music Hall

The Capital University Glee Club of Columbus, O., sang and played to a cordial audience in Carnegie Music Hall last night. The orchestra made the usual jolly rumpus that we expect from college fellows, but the singers deserve much credit for the quality of music they are giving.

J. Fred Lissfelt

In accordance with the movement towards better music in the glee clubs now universal in our colleges, the program expressed much that is admirable. To begin with the heavenly "Crucifixus" from Bach's Mass in B Minor is no small feat, and indeed it was one of the best offerings. Henschel's "Morning Hymn" and that great Lutheran Chorale, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," both suffered from bad intonation, a fault that was remedied as the concert progressed. Reddick's arrangement of the spiritual "Standin' in the Need of Prayer" was a high point in the evening's singing. There were also glees of Schumann, Elgar and a new setting of "Outward Bound" by Harold Davidson and dedicated to the club.

Soloists were unusually good for college boys. The flutist Brobst is really a very talented musician, and Keller, Vogeley, Redd and Varner, who did solo work in the choruses, were no less gifted. Wilbur Crist directed and Clarence Felger played accompaniments.

Doctors call it a "counter-irritant," because it gets action and is not just a salve. Musterole helps bring soreness and pain to the surface, and thus gives natural relief. You can feel how its warming action penetrates and stimulates blood circulation. But do not stop with one application. Apply this soothing, cooling, healing ointment generously to the affected area once every hour for five hours. Used by millions for over 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses.

JEWISH RELIEF PLANS RELATED

Plans for carrying a burden twice as heavy as in normal months in addition to extending relief to needy families in boroughs and towns of the county were outlined today by Eugene Herzog, who yesterday was re-elected president of the Jewish Family Welfare Association. The economic depression has thrown upon the organization, one of the 17 agencies financed by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, a relief burden which is creating a deficit of nearly $50,000 a year, at the rate of work done during the last three months.

Up to noon yesterday, 320 acceptances had been received for the Federation's opening dinner Sunday night in the William Penn Hotel, at which time the 10-day campaign will be started in effort to raise $450,000. Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, of Cleveland, will be the guest speaker. A. M. Oppenheimer, appeal chairman, will be toastmaster. The money raised in the drive will be used to finance the 17 agencies through 1931.

PRESBYTERIANS PLAN PAGEANT

Plans are now under way for an elaborate exposition and pageant, "The Presbyterian World in Pittsburgh," to be presented in Syria Mosque as a feature of the Presbyterian General Assembly, which convenes here May 28-June 3. The pageant and exposition will depict the work of the denomination in all parts of the world.

A local personnel from Pittsburgh to number possibly 1,000 will be needed to present the pageant. They will impersonate characters of virtually every race and creed, among whom the Presbyterian messengers have started missionary work.

A special committee of the Boards and General Council has been selected, with Dr. Franklin Ward, secretary of the General Council as chairman, to direct the presentation. He will be assisted by the Rev. George G. Dowey, of the Board of National Missions. The Rev. Dr. Michael M. McDivitt, pastor of the Knoxville Presbyterian Church, will be chairman for the local Pittsburgh exposition committee.

Four Held in Death After Party Freed

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Feb. 13.—A coroner's jury investigating the death of Abner Shoaff, 77, following a liquor party, returned a verdict that his death was due to "shock and exposure" and exonerated four men held pending the inquest.

COUNTY WORKER HONORED

Several hundred friends, including many leading political figures of the city and county, attended a testimonial dinner in honor of David B. Roberts, assistant superintendent of county buildings, in the William Penn Hotel last night.

The affair was sponsored by the Fifth Ward Association and was devoid of politics, the speeches being laudatory of Roberts. He was presented with a watch. Roberts has been active for many years in Fifth Ward politics.

Ben L. Anderson, the toastmaster, was presented by Morris Gordon. The speakers were James F. Malone, secretary of property and supplies of the state of Pennsylvania; County Commissioner Joseph G. Armstrong and his son, State Senator Joseph G. Armstrong, Jr.; Dr. John B. Sutherland, football coach of Pitt; Dr. William D. McClelland, and Roberts.

AUTOIST FREED IN DEATH CASE

Judge James Gray in Criminal Court late yesterday granted the petition of Defense Attorney Louis Little that the jury hearing the case against John Junn, 23, of Homestead Park, accused of involuntary manslaughter, be instructed to return a verdict of acquittal.

Junn was indicted in connection with the death of Mrs. Evelyn Hursey Dowers, 19, of 802 Amity street, Homestead, killed when Junn's automobile, in which she was a passenger, struck a pole at Main and Dewey streets, Homestead Park.

Junn explained to the jury that he heard a snap and the car plunged into the pole, Mrs. Dowers being hurled to the street. Junn said the accident was unavoidable.

Salem woman gives credit to Vegetable Compound

HAWTHORNE'S House of Seven Gables is situated at the end of Turner Street overlooking Salem harbor. This historic neighborhood is now a Polish-American district. At 15 Turner St. live Mr. & Mrs. R. J. Kulakowski and their twelve healthy, happy children.

"But we weren't always happy," Mr. Kulakowski confided. "My wife was ailing for five years. First she seemed just tired and run down. Then she got weaker and weaker and became so crippled that we had to carry her from room to room. When I came home from work, I would find her crawling on her hands and knees. I was a motorman then on the Salem to Boston cars. One day I was telling my conductor about my wife and he suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Said it had helped his sister. Well, I got a bottle and she started taking it. We kept on until she took about eight bottles in all. By that time she was up on her feet and doing her work."

Mrs. Kulakowski's twelfth child was born on Easter Monday. "I have never lost a child," she says, "and none of them has ever been seriously ill. My oldest daughter is now in her teens, and I am giving her the Vegetable Compound, too."

EMPLOYMENT BLANKS SENT 10,000

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH

By William Pfarr

John Cicero's barber shop was an excellent place not to go yesterday morning if you wanted a haircut. John himself was born in Italy and most of his barbers are of Italian descent, so all ears were glued to the radio awaiting the voice of Pope Pius XI. In fact, John, who understands Latin, translated the Pope's message.

Mr. Pfarr

Never was there a more attentive audience and never was Cicero more engrossed.

And in the middle of the speech the telephone rang. An assistant grabbed the phone to answer it.

"Tell them," Cicero announced, "Cicero is not in. Cicero would shave nobody now—not even Jimmy Coyne."

Old Joe had the most resonant voice of them all. . . And then there were Doc Holmes, Henderson, Slicker, Penn, Dolph Ludwig, Wilcox and Barney Trapp. . . Toerge's orchestra played all the fashionable social affairs in this end of the state. . . And the original Royal Italian Orchestra was good, too. . . And so was the Mozart Orchestra, and Tom Brady. . .

Trust to us to get the real lowdown on valentines. A lady who sells them predicted that more valentines would be sold this year than ever and in return we predicted that more people would send valentines signed simply, "Guess who, you big stiff!" Valentine Day is the second biggest card day of the year, Christmas being the biggest. We asked the lady our stock question—will the turn in the economic cycle (and you'd better read that again) affect the sale of valentines? She creased her brow and thought deep thoughts for a minute and then said, decidedly, "No."

WILL ROGERS SAYS

TEXARKANA, Tex., Feb. 13.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

My friend Mr. Parks, editor of Fort Smith, says: "Somebody must have been kidding Will about that circus stranded here." Nobody was kidding Will. I talked with the women on the committee that had to dig up the feed. I bet the editor never even knew they were there. Besides, if people do send checks and things to eat for 'em, and they don't need it, why send 'em back? Give them to the Red Cross there. There is nothing that a lion eats that a human doesn't. And we have people hungry enough that I would even hate to trust 'em with an elephant's hay. Well, I have to fly to California today. I got a wire from the Fox people that I work for, and they told me I better rush home to work on a picture or I would join the unemployed. Yours,

WILL.

Vivacious Orphan Looks After Her Aunt's Youngster

CHAPTER I.

Mary Lou Thurston, walking along Shore road on a bright autumn morning, gazed wistfully across the Narrows and at Quarantine, where a great ocean liner had just come to anchor. The water was sparkling blue and the sky was a great arch of azure. Fussy little tugs plodded along, a sea breeze swept bright color into Mary Lou's round cheeks, an airplane droned overhead, importantly.

"Mary Lou!"

Mary Lou tugged her giddy little beret over one eye and turned to behold her young cousin and charge, Billy Sanderson, leaping up and down on his six-year-old legs, pinioned to earth only by the string of the red paper kite he held in his fat hand.

"What is it, Billy?"

"Jever go up in an airplane, Mary Lou? What makes airplanes stay up? Kin I go up in an airplane, Mary Lou?" inquired Billy, all on a breath.

"No," said Mary Lou, regretfully, "no, Billy, I've never been up in an airplane. They stay up because—" Here Mary Lou, floundering in the sea of her own scanty knowledge, ended firmly, "because of the engine . . ."

"Autos have engines . . . they stay down," remarked Billy, helpfully.

"Look," cried Mary Lou, "at the big boat."

While Billy looked and his 20-year-old cousin sighed with relief the airplane vanished into the horizon and Billy began formulating other questions, relative to boats, in his busy mind.

Mary Lou sat down on a green and white bench where the drive curved to a wide look-out, topped by a flagpole circled with red autumn flowers.

"Stay right here, Billy Sanderson," she commanded, an anxious eye on the cars sweeping up and down the road.

A Born Dreamer

While Billy clambered over the seats and fell into the flower bed, clutching his kite, Mary Lou looked over the water and dreamed.

She was always dreaming. She was round and delectable, pretty and vital. She had red-gold hair and eyes as blue as the water flowing past the sea wall. She had a pert rose and a sweet, gallant, red mouth. Also she was slender where slenderness is demanded, and curved where curves are necessary for beauty. Small as a watch-charm, lively as a cricket, fresh as a budding rose and dreamy as a May night . . . this was Mary Lou Thurston . . . sitting on a green and white bench on Brooklyn's Shore road—once known as Millionaires' Row—looking at a stately ocean liner and wishing herself in Persia or Peru, Afghanistan, India, England—

Not that Mary Lou was unhappy. She was too healthy for unhappiness, too sweet for discontent. But she was as vitally restless as a puppy tugging at his leash. And she was a dreamer born, a weaver of enchanting fairy tales and legends, with the innocent egotism of youth. She read herself into the pages of every book, she saw herself as the heroine of every play she went to, she was always imagining herself in the most amazing, the most enchanting situations.

An Orphan Girl

The side streets, off Shore road, are a hodge-podge of architectural "periods." Civil War, Gen. Grant, Tweed Ring and strictly "modernistic." Rows of red brick houses, each the twin of its neighbor, run along only to be brought up short by a great sprawling, bay-windowed frame house, built for space and comfort, sitting back in its own flower garden with, perhaps, a little vegetable patch added. Now and then, among more pretentious pseudo-Spanish dwellings of cement and stucco and almost-wrought-iron balconies, one sees a small frame dwelling of an earlier day, white painted, green shuttered, demure and lovely.

In such a house Mary Lou Thurston lived with her young aunt and uncle, Clara and Howard Sanderson, and their extremely lively youngster, Billy. Mary Lou Thurston was that fast-vanishing American, the "home" girl. Once she had had the most charming and delightful parents imaginable, young and careless, happy hearted and improvident. Her father had been a painter—not a very good painter, but a very happy one. On a tiny income he and his beautiful young wife and Mary Lou had traveled almost all over the world. Then they had come home and there had been an epidemic and presently there was only Mary Lou left to remember.

So, at 15, she had come to live with her mother's brother and his wife. And as Billy was a baby and as Mrs. Sanderson had wished to continue with her excellent "job" as secretary to a publisher, Mary Lou had fitted in, a valuable addition to the little household.

It was Mary Lou who looked after Billy, who kept the little white and green house as shining as a new pin, who wandered along Third avenue with a basket on her arm, remembering the Italian of her childhood, to the delight of the fruiterers, laughing with them, asking politely after the health of their families, pinching lettuce heads, weighing oranges and doing a shrewd bit of bargaining. It was Mary Lou who learned to cook, to put Billy's spinach through a seive, to provide the Sanderson family with tested recipes from the magazines and to wean them away from cans and delicatessen.

So the youthful Sandersons went forth to work and Mary

JOB RELIEF CAMPAIGN OPENS

Applications Mailed Out To Family Heads; Will Aid Pittsburghers First

The enrollment of 10,000 unemployed heads of families in the county was inaugurated today by the Allegheny County Emergency Association, with the mailing of its first batch of applications.

These cases were determined to be the most urgent because they were applicants for aid from the city. The names were taken from the list of the City Department of Welfare and a force of clerks commenced the distribution of applications with the opening of headquarters for the association in the Grant Building.

The association intends to find work for these unemployed before seeking applications generally throughout the county. The applicant is required to obtain a certificate from his last regular employer. The association is urging those who receive applications to return them as quickly as possible.

UTILITIES CONTRIBUTE

The second contribution to the fund of the association for stabilizing employment was received from Frank R. Phillips, senior vice president of the Philadelphia Company and affiliated companies, today. The check to Roy A. Hunt, treasurer, represented a day's payroll based on the year 1929 for the Equitable Gas Company, Duquesne Light Company, Pittsburgh Railways Company and Pittsburgh Motor Coach Company and other affiliated concerns, in accordance with the plan of the association.

Phillips praised the Pittsburgh plan, saying:

"The Pittsburgh plan has been given just praise throughout the United States and it behooves us of the Greater Pittsburgh district to see that it does not fail its purpose. The Allegheny County Emergency Association has a stupendous job ahead of it and if it is to succeed it must have sufficient funds to carry on its work. Immediate action is necessary if we are to correct the unemployment situation that is confronting us."

COMMITTEE CONFERS

The operation committee of the association, of which Phillips is chairman, met at his office yesterday to formulate a plan of action, to be announced later. The committee included A. E. Braun, W. S. Linderman, Frank Chesterman, Edgar J. Kaufmann, Frank Bell, E. W. Mudge and Maj. Philip Matthews.

MY EXPERIENCES IN THE WORLD WAR

By JOHN J. PERSHING

Commander-in-Chief, American Expeditionary Forces

Succeeding chapters of "My Experiences in the World War" will appear daily and Sunday exclusively in the Sun-Telegraph.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Secretary of War Baker went to London to discuss with the British authorities the prospects for additional shipping and also the general subject of munitions. While there he sent me the following telegram March 25 embodying suggestions from the Prime Minister which showed the deep anxiety of the British:

"I have just had a long talk with the prime minister. He urges three proposals for your consideration, first, that our divisions in France be placed immediately in line to relieve French divisions for service elsewhere, quiet sectors being chosen for troops with least training.

Gen. Pershing

"Second, that all available engineer troops be taken from lines of communication work and sent to aid of British engineers preparing positions back of present lines. It is urged that suspension of our work would be but temporary and that the work suggested is imperative.

"Third, that infantry be sent first of the entire six divisions to be transported by British in view of present acute needs of that army. No answer to the foregoing is necessary until I see you tomorrow when we can discuss the suggestions fully."

As to the question of using our troops, Gen. Petain, in response to my offer of assistance on my visit to Compiegne, had already stated that the best thing we could do for the moment would be to replace French divisions in quiet sectors so that they could go to the aid of the British or elsewhere, as might be desired, and preparations were under way to that end.

Giardino Makes Appeal

Meanwhile, Sir Douglas Haig, British commander, had asked for engineers and heavy artillery, of which three regiments of the former were placed at his disposal at once and the personnel of two regiments of the latter about to arrive were offered.

I went to Versailles March 26 and talked with Gen. Giardino who had replaced Gen. Cadorna as Italy's military representative on the Supreme War Council.

Gen. Giardino

Gen. Giardino made an appeal for an allotment of our troops. He argued that their presence would be tangible proof of the intense feeling of co-operation that inspired the American nation, that it would encourage those Italian working people who had been in America,

OXYGEN AIDS ILL CHILD; ONE DIES

Arnold Muriel, 2, of 1636 Bedford avenue, stricken with pneumonia, was breathing today with the aid of oxygen administered by police and employes of the Mine Safety Appliances Company. Similar methods used to keep life in Joseph Vorchak, 3, of 1314 Forbes street, suffering from measles and pneumonia, proved futile when the child died late yesterday.

Ill with measles since February 4, the Vorchak child developed pneumonia Saturday. Inhalators from the Center avenue police station were put into use yesterday morning until a specially designed, new type pneumonia tent was provided by the appliances company, and used for the first time.

The Muriel child has had pneumonia since Thursday. After three hours of oxygen treatment yesterday, the boy breathed easier. Parents of both children have been out of work for some time.

3 YOUTHS HELD IN ROBBERIES

Charged with receiving stolen goods in connection with the looting of a Brackenridge confectionery, Edward Nowacki, 18, of 5 Pine street, Natrona, was to be remanded to the county jail today to await court trial. Two boys, both of Natrona, were to be turned over to Juvenile Court on robbery charges.

Patrolman Joseph Myers, of Brackenridge, arrested Nowacki, while Sergt. Charles Blaser and Patrolman Moss Nicholas, of Tarentum, yesterday arrested the two boys. The latter were said to have robbed the confectionery of John Minnick, Ninth avenue and Morgan street, Sunday night. Nowacki was accused of having purchased a revolver taken from the store. The trio were given hearings before Justice of the Peace E. C. Starke, of Tarentum last night.

Because of their youth, the Sun-Telegraph will not publish the names of the two young boys.

Social Federation Plans Open Forum

A luncheon and open forum will be held Wednesday in the William Penn Hotel by the Pittsburgh Federation of Social Agencies. Judge Charles W. Hoffman, of Cincinnati, for 15 years judge of the Juvenile Court there, will be the principal speaker. He will discuss a bill pending in legislature which would raise the Juvenile Court age in Pennsylvania from 16 to 18 years.

SICK WIFE SAYS MATE GAVE CHILDREN TO STRANGERS

FIGHTS DIVORCE ON GROUNDS OF FRAUD

Mother of Seven, 'Charity' Patient, Takes Stand to Deny Desertion Charges

A charity patient at the Leech Tuberculosis Sanitarium today testified before Judge Frank P. Patterson in Common Pleas Court that the father of her seven children had placed four of them and herself in the hands of strangers and institutions without her consent, or knowledge and had then attempted to obtain a divorce by trickery.

The mother, Mrs. Myrtle Clark, is contesting the divorce action instituted by her husband, Llewellyn Clark, of 6009 Rodman street, East Liberty.

Clark testified today his wife had deserted him in Johnstown March 5, 1928, but she denied this, and said he left her March 25, 1929, after his father, George Clark, had her placed in the sanitarium.

SCAN RECORDS

Records of the Leech Hospital will be produced to determine the exact date of her entrance as a public charge in the institution, Mrs. Clark said today.

"In July, 1930, my husband came to the sanitarium with two other men. They got me to sign a blank paper. My husband previously had offered me $2,000 and the custody of the two children if I would not contest his divorce. I didn't want a divorce on account of the children."

Clark said:

"I never made such an offer. I never saw $2,000 in my life."

Mrs. Clark said her husband first offered to take her to his parents' home when physicians said she was a curable case, but that, later, he changed his mind.

TELLS HER STORY

Mrs. Clark, in the recreation room of the sanitarium yesterday, told of her life with her husband. Her thin fingers caught at each other nervously as she spoke.

"I was born in Mahaffey, Pa., in 1898. I married Llewellyn at Johnstown 14 years ago. We moved to Oregon, where three of our five living children, Boyd, 13; Ione, 11, and Elwin, 9, were born. Later we returned to Johnstown, where the fourth child, Delphine, 7, was born.

"About two years ago we moved to Cleveland, where I was taken ill with tuberculosis. My husband became angry. I came to Pittsburgh last March to meet my sister, Edna Bratton, who is employed in the home of James Blaugh, of 702 Napoleon avenue, Johnstown. To make it easier for us Edna took little Delphine."

CHILD AT FOUNDLING HOME

Mrs. Clark said she gave birth to a fifth child in the Magee Hospital. It was sent to the Lillian Convalescent Rest at Valencia, as a foundling. Jackie is still there, a bright, laughing infant, with light, curling hair. The mother says the father disowns him. He has never visited the child at the home, according to Mrs. L. A. Carpenter, superintendent.

CHARGES DESERTION

Clark sued for divorce on grounds of desertion last September. He appeared in Common Pleas Court with a witness—a Mr. McGeary—whom Mrs. Clark denies knowing. The mother was too ill to attend the hearing. Judge Frank P. Patterson postponed the case. He told Attorney Wilson he was suspicious of Clark's story. He ordered a rehearing January 30. It was postponed until today.

Rochester Bandits Rob Man of $260

Rochester, Pa., police today were looking for two Negroes who, late last night attacked Steven George, at Main and Adams streets, in that borough, and after knocking him down, robbed him of $260.

SLEUTHS' RADIO AWAITS AUTOS

The city today received official permission from the Federal Radio Commission to operate its police broadcasting station in Mt. Washington.

Public Safety Director James M. Clark received the permit, dated January 20.

Clark said the station probably would not be in operation for two weeks, pending purchase of radio equipped automobiles in which detectives will cruise the city and pick up radio flashes of the latest holdups. The permit authorized a 400-watt power station. Clark had asked for 500 watts.

Hemorrhoid Sufferers

End Your Piles Without Salves or Cutting

External treatments cannot permanently end Piles. Nor does cutting remove the cause.

The cause is internal—bad circulation of the blood in the lower bowel. The veins are flabby—the bowel walls weak—the parts almost dead. To quickly and safely rid yourself of piles an internal medicine must be used to heal and strengthen the affected parts.

Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, a specialist, after years of study discovered a real internal Pile remedy. He named his prescription HEM-ROID and prescribed it for 1000 patients with the most serious record of success in six cases and then decided every Pile sufferer should be able to get HEM-ROID from their own druggist.

Don't waste time on external remedies or think of the pain and expense of an operation until you have tried HEM-ROID. Mayo & Liggett's will supply you and guarantee money back if it does not end all Pile misery.

MOTHER JAILED THREE DAYS FOR DEBT

Woman Allowed to Return To Sick Children After Stay in County Cell

After spending three days in the county jail while two of her four children were ill in their home at Grays Landing, Greene County, Mrs. Edward Gilbert, 38, was permitted to return home last night, pending a hearing Saturday before Alderman Sol Goldstein, of Squirrel Hill.

Unable to pay a furniture bill in McKeesport, and unable to raise bail pending a hearing scheduled for yesterday, Mrs. Gilbert was arrested Friday and lodged in the county jail. Sol G. Millanovich, of the South Side, posted bond for her Monday and she was released. Without funds to go home, Mrs. Gilbert remained at the dwelling of a sister in Carrick until the hearing yesterday.

GIVEN UNTIL SATURDAY

Arraigned before Goldstein yesterday on a charge of larceny by bailee, Mrs. Gilbert was given until Saturday to return several pieces of furniture to the J. Hershberger Company, of McKeesport or pay a bill amounting to $51.

In November, 1929, Mrs. Gilbert purchased furniture amounting to $34 from the Hershberger Company and it was delivered to her home in McKeesport. Last March, Mrs. Gilbert says, her husband left. Since that time she moved to Greene County and has been receiving $3 a week from the poor directors there. When she moved the goods, Mrs. Gilbert, it is claimed, made herself liable to the charge of larceny by bailee as the goods still belonged to the Hershberger Company. N. E. Rinker, credit official of the store, said he had made several efforts to collect payments from Mrs. Gilbert or to have her return the furniture.

LEGAL COSTS ADDED

With a balance of $22 remaining and having made no payments for months, Mrs. Gilbert was charged with larceny by bailee in the information made before Goldstein. Constables found her at Grays Landing, took her to Coal Valley in search of her husband, and then to Carrick to her sister in an effort to raise bond. The costs of the constables' work and the information amount to $29, making the total owed by Mrs. Gilbert $51.

Mrs. Gilbert went back to Grays Landing last night to stay with her children, whose ages range from 11 to 17.

$7,000 STOLEN IN EAST END ROBBERIES

Bandit Trio Menaces Two In Shop; Homes Looted, Pedestrians in Holdups

Bandits and house robbers who operated in the East End obtained more than $7,000 in loot last night.

A youth entered the Lang Cleaning Company, at 6209 Hoeveler street, and asked H. L. Brisset, the manager, directions to Station street. Then his two companions, their faces covered with handkerchiefs and carrying revolvers, entered. Brisset and Edward Sweitzer, of 317 Princeton place, were forced into a rear room, where Sweitzer hid his ring, watch and wallet, containing $23, in his shoe.

The bandits looted the cash register of $10 and the racks of clothing valued at $500.

DWELLING LOOTED

Clothing and jewelry valued at $5,000 was reported stolen from the home of L. G. Hults, 5109 Bayard street.

From the home of Edgar E. Wertheimer, at 1266 Bell Rock avenue, clothing and jewelry valued at $1,600 was stolen.

Clyde Fleming, of 5628 Harvard street, a taxicab driver, was robbed of $9 at Hazel and Fullerton streets by two men who engaged his cab at Sixth and Wylie avenues, he told police.

WOMEN'S PURSES STOLEN

In view of more than a score of pedestrians Mary Petrosky, of 5622 Aylesboro avenue, was robbed of her purse containing $35, a fountain pen valued at $10 and a wrist watch valued at $35 by a man while she was waiting for a street car at Penn and Highland avenue late yesterday.

A Negro robbed Mary McGinnis, of 1433 Chelton avenue, of her purse, containing $10, while she and several other persons waited for a street car at Seventh avenue and Smithfield street last night.

An armed Negro rifled the cash register in the confectionery of Anthony Monico, 6327 Everett street.

Three men called at the home of Mrs. Bertha Berkowich, 132 Morewood avenue, yesterday, and took away her washing machine, saying they were from a repair shop. The machine was valued at $90.

F. L. Boggs, manager of the Kroger grocery at 6957 Hamilton avenue, told police that $20 worth of candy and tobacco and $17.50 had been taken by robbers.

GIRL RUN DOWN BY STOLEN CAR

Alleged to have struck a girl while driving a stolen automobile and later to have wrecked the machine as he fled police, Joseph Carton, 17, Child street, Oakland, was held by South Side police on a suspicious-person charge today.

Losing control of the machine as he fled, police said, after striking Stella Swinkosky at Brady and Wharton streets, Carton crashed into the fence surrounding the Ormsby School playground.

The Swinkosky girl was treated in South Side Hospital for lacerations.

DAUGHTER LOST, HE SHOOTS SELF

The disappearance of his oldest daughter was believed to have prompted John Mirek, 52, to try to kill himself in the third floor of his home, 934 Market street, McKeesport, according to police.

Suffering gun shot wounds in the chest and head, Mirek is in serious condition in McKeesport Hospital.

His daughter, Blanche, 23, disappeared three months ago. There are three other children.

DEATH VERDICT PASSED ON 3 BANDITS

Jury Convicts Trio in the Slaying of Butcher; One Confessed to Firing Shot

First degree murder with the death penalty was the verdict returned today by a jury against three self-confessed Negro bandits for the murder of August Braum, West Elizabeth butcher, October 4.

Each one the defendants—Clarence Williams, Cleo Peterson and Robert Smith—rose in turn to hear the death verdict of the jurors. It was the first triple murder verdict returned since the Legislature gave judges the power to affix the death penalty in 1925. It was also the only first degree murder verdict returned in the county within the last year.

The jury had retired at 2:30 yesterday afternoon.

Williams, from the stand, admitted he fired the shot that killed Braum during a holdup of the latter's butcher shop. He contended he fired the shot in self-defense. Peterson and Smith insisted they did not fire.

'Blue Bird' Children Named

The children who will appear with the Junior League members in Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" on February 19, 20 and 21 at the Nixon Theater have been chosen. They will portray the unborn children in the Azure land.

They will be shown perfecting the inventions and discoveries they will make when they are born on earth and grown up. And they pack up all their illnesses too, in a little bag, to carry along, because Father Time forbids them to go in his ship to be born empty-handed.

AIR PASSENGER PERILS FOUR

DETROIT, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—A man who endangered the lives of two fellow passengers and the pilot of a Chicago-Detroit airplane with his eccentric actions yesterday was under observation in the psychopathic ward of Receiving Hospital today.

He is James J. Mangan, 35, advertising manager for a Chicago novelty company. The reason for his strange actions has not been determined by hospital officials, but one physician said they might have been a manifestation of air sickness.

Louis Steward, the pilot, said Mangan leaped from his seat, shouting, when the plane was over South Bend, Ind., and tried several times to climb into the control room, crying that he wanted "to help you run this plane."

Taft Lauds Part Taken By Cincinnati Women In Civic Movements

High praise for the part taken by Cincinnati women in the city's movement towards a civic ideal was voiced by Charles P. Taft II this morning in his talk before the Friday Morning Club. The national political parties, he said, have used women as scenery, but they have found it impossible to enlist their sympathies or their efforts in ordinary party squabbles and never against a forward-looking movement like the city charter movement. The city charter people, on the other hand, have relied on the women as the backbone of the organization; their leadership has been outstanding; they get out the vote and they vote themselves and never stop stirring people up, he said.

"Cincinnati Under Its New Regime" was Mr. Taft's subject. In the old days there were about 5,000 jobs at the City Hall and the court house; there were 500 precincts and each precinct, curiously enough, contained 10 job-holders, he said, adding that the condition of holding a job was that the holder's own and three other votes would be recorded in the right way at every party primary. Independence in politics was impossible within the organization and was quite dangerous financially for the ordinary citizen.

Through the joint effort exerted every year for the Community Chest, the altruistic and public-spirited people of the city learned how to work together and learned their power to reach carefully thought-out goals that might have seemed at first impossible ideals.

The speaker went on to tell of the formation in 1920 of the Cincinnatus Association, a small group of young business and professional men who met bi-weekly, discussed important civic matters, asked questions of those who should know and soon "became news" because they had the facts and because no one else in whom people had confidence had been willing to talk as they talked.

The winning fight against an extra tax levy and for a city manager were mentioned by Mr. Taft, who also gave some of the startling reductions in cost under the city manager. He said:

"The sum and substance of it is that for one of the very few times in the history of the United States there has been an honest and efficient administration of the city's business in its executive department for a long enough period so that the results of it can be seen."

Mr. Taft also told of the foresight displayed by the municipality in handling its unemployment conditions, which began in May, 1929, with the settling up of a permanent committee on stabilizing employment.

Mr. Taft ranked the form of election, namely, proportional representation, and the leadership which has been developed as the two greatest elements in the success of the Cincinnati plan.

Too often, really charming girls allow poisons of constipation to take the bloom from their cheeks, to bring the pimples and wrinkles that age complexions.

Constipation is so much more prevalent among women, so much more difficult for them. What a pity when prevention is so easy. Simply eat a delicious cereal.

Two tablespoonfuls of Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, eaten daily, are guaranteed to prevent and relieve both temporary and recurring constipation. In severe cases, use with each meal.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN sweeps the intestines clean of all poisonous wastes. How much better than taking habit-forming pills and drugs.

THE NEWEST STYLE IN DINNER DRESSES

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Feb. 13. — We are under cover at night now when it comes to dressing for dinner. For the long-sleeved dinner dress with a minimum of decollete has become very important here. Chanel has been showing dinner dresses of bright chiffons with long, loose sleeves and is making such models also in other fabrics. We have had such sartorial exposures lately that a frock that hides the back and shoulders not to speak of the arms, is a most refreshing novelty and is so regarded by the many women who have already appeared in these frocks. They are of course cut on simple lines, for this type of dress makes a virtue of simplicity, although without unduly stressing it. Therefore all trimming and ornamentation is kept at a respectful distance so as not to spoil the really splendid effect of these very new dinner frocks.

THE DRAWING today depicts one of the frocks of which we have been writing. It is a Chanel model and is eloquent of her brilliant originality. This model is one of the loveliest dinner dresses in her latest collection and it is made entirely of satin backed gold cloth—in itself a real novelty. So smooth and gleaming is the surface of this fabric that at casual glance it resembles soft gilt kid. The lines of this model are exquisite in their soft grace and simplicity.

PRUDENCE PENNY'S RECIPES

VALENTINE GINGERBREAD DESSERT.—Mix 1 cup of cream whipped, 2 tablespoons of confectioners' sugar, 1/3 cup of pineapple cut in small pieces and 1 cup of white grapes halved and seeded. Place in the refrigerator to chill. When ready to serve cut a brick of cake into heart-shaped pieces. Place a heart-shaped piece flatside up on a dessert plate and put the cake on it. Put cream over cake and top with a maraschino cherry. Makes six servings.

CEREAL CUTLETS—Cook one-half cup cream of wheat, whole wheat cereal, 5 tablespoons fat, 2 tablespoons of soft bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 cup minced meat, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, dash of pepper and salt.

Mold in pre-heated flour which has been blended with milk to thin. Cook 2 minutes. Make cutlets carefully. Add one egg, beaten with 1 tablespoon water and roll in cracker meal or fish. Sprinkle with fat, place in cool, deep fat at 390 degrees F. Serve hot with tomato sauce.

UPSIDE DOWN CAKE.—Melt 2 tablespoons butter, 1 cup brown sugar, 5 slices pineapple, 10 maraschino cherries, 1 cup granulated sugar, 1 cup Manischewitz cake meal, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 3 eggs, grated rind 1 lemon. Melt butter in 9-inch skillet or cake pan, stir in brown sugar, remove from fire, spread evenly and arrange pineapple and cherries in fancy design. Make sponge cake dough by beating together egg yolks and sugar, adding lemon, salt and cake meal, then folding in stiffly-beaten egg whites. Put batter over fruit and bake 1 hour in slow oven (300 degrees). When done, hold tray over cake, then invert tray and skillet together, to prevent cake breaking. The fruit will be on top. Serve with whipped cream.

ORANGE FLUFF CAKE.—7 eggs, 1 cup sugar, 1/3 cup orange juice, 1 lemon (juice only), 1 cup Manischewitz cake meal, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1/2 teaspoon cream tartar. Beat egg yolks until light, and gradually sugar, which has been sifted 5 times. Beat again until very light, then add orange and lemon juice. Sift together cake meal with baking powder and fold into mixture. Beat egg whites until foamy, then add cream of tartar and beat until stiff. Fold in these stiff egg whites, pour mixture into an ungreased patent tube pan and bake 45-50 minutes for 50 minutes. Invert pan and allow cake to cool before removing.

SPONGE CAKE FOR CHOCOLATE LOG ROLL.—Sift flour, then measure 2 cups pastry flour, and resift twice with 2 teaspoons baking powder. Beat 4 eggs until creamy. Add 2 cups of sugar and continue beating until very thick and light colored.

In the meantime heat 1 cup of evaporated milk to the boiling point in the double boiler. Add the hot milk to the sugar-egg mixture and beat until stiff and fluffy. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla and 1/2 teaspoon lemon extract, then fold in flour, little by little, thoroughly. Pour out in greased paper in a sheet cake pan and bake from 10 to 12 minutes in a hot oven.

Remove the cake from the oven and turn it upside down on a cake rack to cool, letting the cake cool with the pan. As soon as there are any crusts they will be cut off and scraps and a 2-inch strip from one end of the cake.

Spread the slightly warm cake with two-thirds of the chocolate cream filling (recipe follows) which has been cooled and roll as for a jelly roll. Roll up the cake strip exactly as the later piece was rolled. Cut this small piece into two strips at oblique angles and place these in the natural position on the log. Cover the outside with the other third of the chocolate cream filling, forming it to represent the bark.

CHOCOLATE CREAM FILLING.—Melt 2 squares of bitter chocolate over hot water. Add seven-eighths cup sugar that has been thoroughly mixed with one-fourth cup flour and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Blend well. Add 1 cup of boiling water and 1 cup of evaporated milk. Cook in a double boiler 2-3 minutes, stirring occasionally. Pour chocolate mixture gradually over well beaten egg yolk, beating vigorously to prevent curdling.

Return to the double boiler and cook 2 minutes longer. Add 1 tablespoon butter and 1/2 teaspoon vanilla.

CODFISH FLAKES IN CREAM SAUCE.—Flake one 10-ounce can of codfish cakes in large rough pieces using a fork. Drop into deep hot fat, 360 degrees and fry until brown. Drain and serve with sauce made by melting 2 tablespoons of butter, adding 2 tablespoons of flour, and then gradually adding 1 1/2 cups of milk and cooking until thick. Add salt and pepper and 1 teaspoon of lemon juice. This may be served on toast.

CRAB MEAT A LA NEWBURG.—Four tablespoons butter, 3/4 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 2 egg yolks, 1 large tin crab meat, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, 1/2 cup thin cream, few grains cayenne and nutmeg.

Melt the butter, add the crab-meat from which bones have been removed and stir and cook 3 minutes, keeping pieces as large as possible. Sprinkle with salt, few grains cayenne, few grains nutmeg, lemon juice and Worcestershire sauce. Add the cream mixed with the egg yolks. Place over hot water and stir gently until thickened. Serve at once on half slices of toasted bread.

CRAB CANAPE.—Spread buttered toast with anchovy paste. Cream 2 tablespoons of butter, add a cup of crabmeat, finely chopped, a teaspoonful of mustard, a few drops Worcestershire sauce, a few grains of cayenne and 6 olives finely chopped. Spread the above mixture on the bread or on toasted crackers, garnish and serve on lettuce leaves.

DATE AND NUT BREAD.—One cup flour, 1 cup graham flour, 1/2 cup confectioners' sugar, 1 cup milk, 5 tablespoons chopped nuts, 4 tablespoons chopped dates, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt.

Mix the dry ingredients; add the floured dates and nuts and the milk. Mix well and bake in a buttered bread tin in a moderate oven for one-half an hour. (This is a very rich bread.)

Oysters Found to Be Rich in Nutritive Value

A quart of this luscious seafood gives as much heat to the human body as a quart of milk. Oysters are highly digestible except when fried.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.,
Formerly Health Commissioner of New York City
United States Senator From New York

When the earliest white settlers landed in North America, they found oyster shells scattered along the coast line. These were proof that the Indians had eaten oysters in great quantities. The white man took to them at once. It is probable that oysters were eaten at the first Thanksgiving dinner celebration.

Oysters are classified with the "shell fish," because of their hard shell covering. They are found in various parts of this country, in shallow salt waters. For example they are produced in large quantities along the coast of Long Island Sound, in Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi.

The industry known as "oyster farming" has developed greatly. This was necessary because the supplies of the original oyster beds had almost entirely disappeared.

This step in the industry and its careful conduct by the men in it, insures an abundant and clean product. This is of the utmost importance in protecting the public health. At one time, typhoid fever was spread by eating oysters grown in contaminated waters.

Many problems, beginning with the sanitary conditions of the waters, in the packing and shipping the oysters had to be solved. The governmental supervision now in force insures your obtaining safe oysters.

This may be interesting history, but today I want to tell you of the importance of oysters as a food. They are more than a delicacy, because they possess nutritive value.

Oysters contain water, protein, fat, salts and carbohydrates. In addition they are rich in vitamin C and in their iodine content. They are very digestible and a highly nutritious food. In recent tests made it was found that a quart of solid oysters gives as much heat to the body as a quart of milk.

Raw oysters and cooked oysters are easily digested. The fried oyster is more difficult to digest. There are many ways of serving oysters. Perhaps the most popular is the oyster stew.

Because there are so many ways of serving oysters and because of their wholesomeness and food value, remember to include them among your purchases. Your family will smile happily when they see them on the table.

MAKE-BELIEVE By FAITH BALDWIN

Lou stayed at home with Billy.

Billy was going to school now, proud as Punch, and Mary Lou had a little more time to herself. But today was Saturday and she and Billy were indulging in their daily airing along the Drive. Rain, shine or snow, Billy was bundled up and trotted out for his exercise, like a little race horse. And he certainly responded to it, being fat, but not too fat, and rosy and almost bursting with energy.

Of course, life wasn't all Billy and spinach, gas stoves and dust mops. Mary Lou had her Sundays, and she was free many evenings. Generally, however, she was to be found with her running nose stuck in a book. She had not many friends of her own age and sex. All the girls she knew went to business and although she saw them occasionally they seemed, somehow, to live in another world. Her best friend—But at this juncture he arrived, a slim, spare young man with a freckled face and hair much redder than her own.

Friend Enthusiastic

"Hello, Mary Lou — Hello, Billy—Gosh, what a tummy! You'll eat yourself into the grave, my lad. Look out . . . over you'll go and the kite with you."

Larry Mitchell, twenty-six, very-inquiring reporter on the Daily Star, plucked Billy from the back of a bench and set him down, tweaked Mary Lou's beret completely over that bright eye and sat himself beside her.

"What, no greetings?" he inquired.

"Of course. What are you doing here this time of day?" asked Mary Lou severely, but her eyes danced. She was very glad to see him. She always was.

"Looking for a murder," was his morbid reply. "Sent over here to scare up a little news. Isn't any. Thought I'd find you here."

Mary Lou had known Larry for three of the five years she had lived with the Sandersons. She had seen him on an average of four times a week ever since. For Larry, dashing out of the Middle Western town which had given him birth to challenge New York with his enthusiasm, his vitality and his typewriter—to say nothing of insatiable curiosity—was much concerned about Mary Lou's education. Oh, not her book learning—she had enough of that—too much, he thought privately—come at in odd and devious ways—but her education in practical sophistication.

Happy Together

He thought her too much the dreamer for this world. He took her on many little jaunts, inexpensive and innocently gay. They went evenings to funny little Italian places in New York and now and then when Larry was very "flush" they danced on the Bossert roof, of a fine summer evening. He came daytimes, too, to walk along the sea wall with Mary Lou and Billy, to sit in Fort Hamilton Park, and on autumn Sundays they sometimes went to a polo game at the Fort itself. They went to motion pictures and they went to theaters, the latter excursions generally due to tickets given Larry by the dramatic critic of his paper. They sat on the Sanderson porch when the nights were clear, or, on rainy evenings, inside in the living room, doing cross word puzzles, solving bookish murders, squabbling and laughing like a couple of youngsters, while Howard Sanderson would raise a handsome eyebrow at his smart, good-looking wife and in the privacy of their bedroom would say, now and then:

"I'm sorry I ever introduced him to her! What in the world will we do without her?"

"It's not serious. They—they laugh too much," answered Clara, quite seriously—"they have too good a time. When a thing's serious the interested pair are gloomy, touchy, sensitive and—oh, emotional! Mary Lou isn't that and, heaven knows, Larry isn't either!"

"And we were like that?" her husband inquired, earnestly.

Clara Sees Objections

"You know we were!" And here she would kiss him and laugh a little. "I like Larry," she once said, "he's a dear—and awfully clever—but he's not the man for Mary Lou."

"Who is, O Wisdom Incarnate?"

"I don't know. Yes, I do. Someone older. Someone who needs her terribly. Not a weak man, I don't mean that," Clara went on trying to explain, "but someone who would call out all her mothering instincts. Larry couldn't. He might if she were an older woman, a different type—I can't explain."

"You certainly can't," answered Howard with conviction.

"They're just friends," Clara said, "love comes first and friendship after, that is, if you're lucky. Friendship doesn't initiate things, as a rule."

"I wonder I ever dared marry you, Mrs. Solomon," remarked her husband gravely, at which she threw a clothes brush at him and the conversation ended abruptly.

Said Larry, this autumn morning, down on Shore road:

"Shall we go gadding—tomorrow?"

"Where?"

"Bus ride . . . and I want to see that collection of Chinese swords at the museum. Eats, somewhere. Not more than two and a half worth."

"My turn to treat!" said Mary Lou, placidly.

"So it is. How much is available?"

"Three, not counting the tip."

"Hetty Green!" gasped Larry, in mock amazement.

That's the kind of a friendship theirs was, you see. Mary Lou had a tiny income, hardly visible to the naked eye, from a life insurance policy that her gay young father had always managed to carry, to everyone's amazement. And the Sandersons gave her gift money now and then. They had wished to put her on a strictly business basis, with a monthly stipend for pin money, but she had refused. She had her own little room and her place at their table. She must do something in return. And as she grew up—at 17 she took over the running of the house—she agreed to look upon whatever she could save from the housekeeping money as her own. Hence, the $3 which was to provide dinner for herself and Larry upon her treat night. For Larry was poor and ambitious, and Mary Lou was poor and adorable, and they got a great deal of fun out of each other and their poverty. And if Larry hadn't succeeded in sophisticating Mary Lou to any great degree, he loved her to death anyway, as he would have loved a delightful younger sister.

Billy in Danger

"Billy, for heaven's sake!"

Billy was out in the road darting with ease between the cars while drivers swerved and grew white and the males among them cursed and grew green.

Larry darted out after the irrepressible young man and succeeded in effecting a bloodless rescue. After which—and the scolding—they all three walked sedately home to the green-shuttered house, where Mary Lou, pausing on the step, invited young Mr. Mitchell to share her lettuce leaf and vegetable soup and Billy's spinach and baked potato, custard and other delicacies of the season.

But Larry refused. He was out gunning for a murder and gun he must.

"See you tomorrow," said Larry and, with a wave of his disreputable hat, he long-legged it down the street, leaving Mary Lou gazing after him, as wistfully as she had looked across the Narrows at the big liner.

Elusiveness Gets Sheiks Quicker Than Petting

Which girl is more popular with men: the petter or the prude?

"Neither!" says John—and then he writes his recipe for girlish popularity in 1931. Maybe you'll be for it with cheers. Maybe you'll be ag'in it with snorts. But whatever your reaction, it's a great letter and you're missing plenty if you don't read it.

"Dear Miss Martin:

"Here's to Petting Cecelia! She has a line on us fellows. The only trouble is that she is making that line extend over too large a territory.

Elusive Quality

"No fellow expects a girl to be a touch-me-not. He usually doesn't date her just for good fellowship. If that were the case, he would spend all his time at Boy Scout meetings. But he admires a girl with technique. A girl who can skillfully elude his attempts to imitate John Gilbert. He likes a girl who promises—but never gives.

"That is the real technique—to keep a man interested, not with highbrow conversation (deliver me from that!) but with that quality of elusiveness which is as powerful as a rare French perfume and just as unapproachable.

"There are only certain moments during a date when a fellow has the desire to pet. Every wise girl knows when that time is coming. And it is up to her to maneuver then just as a wise general who knows his strategy.

"If the fellow catches her off her guard once or twice, he is naturally willing and eager to make the most of it. And I may say that real technique in a girl consists largely of her ability to make such moments seem as unintentional as possible.

Actions Unquestioned

"In other words, there is a certain finesse in dealing with fellows which most girls lack. And because they do lack it, petting becomes ordinary, expected, and almost vulgar. Any girl who is clever about all this need never worry about what a fellow thinks of her. If he is a regular fellow, he admires her for her subtle technique and comes back again and again, thinking that this time he won't fail.

"Such a girl is a good sport. She's a good little pal and could be a real sweetheart. Her actions are not questioned because she pets with discrimination. Something Cecilia quite plainly was not doing. She doesn't consider the price of a show or a dance is deserving of her kisses. And yet she does not let her companion think for one moment that she disapproves of his tendencies to be affectionate.

"She doesn't encourage him. But she doesn't kill his interest with a cold dash of How-Dare-You 'maidenly modesty' either. For she knows that a new, modern modesty has grown up and taken the place of the old prudish modesty of 1880.

"She realizes that behind all her bright wit and clever chatter she must still keep up his masculine interest in that something which is herself, which all the equal rights in the world can never bring down to his own level—and notice that I say 'bring down,' and I believe what I say.

"As for being willing to marry the girl who pets—well, why not? We men can't remain bachelors all our lives and, if we marry at all, we must make a choice. And we love the present not the past, unless we are narrow minded and bigoted. And we don't think that a little petting can spoil all the wonderful things in the girl of today.

Likes Elusive Ones

"Of course, though, for myself I prefer the girl who is hard to get. The girl who is interesting, fine and, as I said before, the possessor of that subtle technique—who is elusive, yet which interests and intrigues and encourages by the mysterious possibilities of what may be given.

"When you've won a girl like that, you feel as if you'd arrived somewhere—got something rare and worth having. And that's where the girl like Cecelia loses. When you win her you don't feel that you've won so much because she is 'easy,' so naturally you don't value her highly.

"I think that this is the real opinion of the 100 per cent modern fellow, who looks for the best in every girl, and appreciates it when he finds it.

"JOHN."

Well, there it is, right off the pen of Mister 1931, himself, in person! And now you've read it, what do you think of it?

How about you, Oscar? and you, Clara?

Speak up! Are you for John, or ag'in him? And if so, why?

Fay King Deplores Unreasonable Hate of Husband for Wife He Had Cherished

DON'T CRY DEAR DADDY DIDN'T MEAN TO BE CROSS!
I COULD FORGIVE YOUR INFATUATION FOR HER, BUT WHY DO YOU TREAT ME AND THE CHILDREN SO CRUELLY? WE LOVE AND NEED YOU!
I NEED A NEW FUR COAT!
I BEGRUDGE EVERY MINUTE I AM AWAY FROM YOU!
FAY KING

By FAY KING

It is sad to see a good husband and father turn from his family because he has become love-mad over some other woman.

The most deplorable part of such an unfortunate affair is not his sudden and insane infatuation for the other women, but his sudden and unreasonable hate for those he had cherished.

Wives are never deceived. And they can forgive the straying, appreciating the wiles and evil influence of greedy scheming women.

But it is more difficult to forgive the long faces and rolling eyes filled with hate that straying husbands bring home.

Begrudging them now the least of his time and money, and with harsh words and hateful looks wishing them out of his way—these are the unpardonable sins!

Love's Reawakening

Continuation of Love's Awakening

By ADELE GARRISON

Madge Is Astounded at Mary's Angry Shout.

I was not long left in doubt of what Lillian wished to find out from Helena Brixton. Having dispatched Purnell with the breakfast tray, and smilingly assured Mary and Noel that there was nothing they needed to do save to talk with each other, she seated herself at the telephone, motioning me to a chair close to her.

"Lo, Helena," she said, when she had obtained her connection. "I'm telephoning for Mrs. Graham about those corsages—the color of each gown, you know, but I want to know something first. What kind of gowns are Carolyn and her friends going to wear tonight? I'll be frank with you. Marion hasn't anything except one old frock and the white ones required by the school. I've got to get her something, but I don't want her to have anything better—or worse than the other girls. In fact, I'd rather have her underdressed than over. I don't want her guests to get the idea that she's trying to outshine them."

As she waited for Helena's reply, I wondered if beneath the casual words there had been a subtle warning to the other woman. I remembered her comment when Mrs. Brixton had angered me by her reference to Mary that Helena's maternal jealousy would make her determined to have Carolyn "belle of the ball" and the conviction came to me that she was trying to bring her old school friend's impulses into accord with her own chivalric ones.

To all appearances, Helena Brixton was the soul of kindness and gentleness, and I knew that no one of really mean impulses could have held Lillian's friendship from early girlhood as had Helena. But I also knew that Lillian's sportsmanship, which would not permit her to seize advantages for her own child that might mean discomfort to a comrade, was an attitude that would seem quixotic to most mothers, including Helena Brixton.

Lillian spoke again, her friend's answer patiently having been completed.

"Oh! I see. They must all be wealthy girls. What do the gowns look like? What's that? Oh! that's a really swell idea, Helena. I'll be over pronto. Goodby."

She hung up the receiver and turned to me, speaking out of the side of her mouth.

"I'll have to leave you with the chaperonage job. Helena says the girls have laid out their evening gowns for pressing, and that I can get a better idea of what they are by looking at them than from her description. I think I'd better go, for she's also going shopping for Carolyn this morning and I think I'd better toddle along, to hold her down. Suppose I telephone you, just as soon as I've seen those gowns and Helena and I have decided what Marion's and Carolyn's are to be."

"That will be all right with me," I told her, "but remember that Mr. Veritzen wished to know the colors as early as possible."

"What he wishes and what he gets, are two different things, already, yet," she drawled. "Of course, it really is necessary that he should know about the number of theater tickets as early as possible—he doesn't know yet, does he, that your party is going to be tonight?"

I started in chagrin.

"Never compliment me on my memory again," I said. "I promised Mr. Seibel, of the dining room, to let him know at 10 o'clock whether the party was to be tonight or tomorrow night."

She rose and gestured toward the telephone.

"You can relieve his mind on that score right away while I get on my wraps," she said. "Phil can wait a few minutes for information about the theater tickets, and until I'm ready about the flowers. He has all the big florists of the town standing at attention whenever he gives the word. If he didn't find out the colors until 4 o'clock he'd have perfect service."

She hurried into her bedroom, and I took down the receiver and asked for Mr. Seibel, telling him that I would be down directly to consult with him about the dinner and supper menu. I spoke to Mary with an air of casualness as I rose.

"Come down to the dining room with me, dearest," I said. "I'm going to plan the menus with Mr. Seibel, and I want you to join the consultation. It's your party, you know."

"Don't call it my party!" Mary said explosively, and I looked at her in astonishment. Her cheeks were flushed, her eyes bright with resentment, while Noel looked sulky and most unhappy. What had happened?

Tomorrow's Horoscope

Saturday, February 14

The astrological forecast for this day is favorable for those in employment, but holds the prospect of delays, disappointments and setbacks for other matters. However, lands, tenancies, personal property and dealings with elderly persons and old establishments may bring some advantages. But generally the influence is a depressing and frustrating one. Be careful against deception.

Those whose birthday it is may look for some advantage or recognition if in the employment of others, but otherwise there may be postponements and obstructions to be encountered during the year. There may be benefits from elderly persons or institutions and real estate and property interests may hold their own.

A child born on this day should be steady, industrious and methodical and may win success through its application and merit and at the hands of elderly persons.

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

The City or Country for Health?

War is a terrible thing in every way. Fortunately, the recent World War taught us many lessons. A great deal of medical knowledge and information was gathered during that awful period.

Dr. Copeland

A very striking and unexpected bit of information acquired was that of the health status of boys who hailed from different parts of the country. Many surprises resulted from this study.

It has always been assumed that country lads were far healthier than their city cousins. The recruits from the country looked stronger and were broader of shoulder, greater in stature. While the city boys appeared pale and often anemic, the boys who had handled the plow and tilled the soil were big, clear eyed and rosy cheeked.

Now comes the surprise. Before going overseas, in the camps where there were epidemics of influenza and other contagious diseases, the boys from the country were usually the first to succumb.

Abroad, where hardships were numerous and physical fatigue excessive, the city boys, as a rule, held up and rarely had to lay down their rifles because of physical illness. The country boys contracted all the ailments to which they were exposed and too often the diseases proved fatal.

The explanation is simple. People who are constantly exposed to germs and diseases, particularly in childhood, acquire what is spoken of as "immunity." This immunity may protect them entirely from disease, or if the disease is contracted, they will have it in mild form and eventually recover.

It can be readily seen that in the boy hailing from the country, where he has had little germ-laden air, and little exposure to disease, immunity is not developed. If he be placed in surroundings laden with disease-producing germs, his chances of combating them are less favorable. This is exactly what happened in the war.

City boys in camps were exposed to diseases that they had been exposed to previously. Their immunity on the whole was greater than that of their country relatives. The mortality of city boys afflicted with influenza and pneumonia was slight as compared to that of the boys from the country.

Further study along these lines has contributed to marked advances in the study of immunology. "Immunology" is the study of that phase of medicine which deals with the reasons why we contract or combat diseases. Immunology plays a great role in the future of preventive medicine.

That at least has been one of the benefits of the war. Let us pray we shall never need another war to help us along this line or any other.

Answers to Health Queries.

I. B. Q.—What would you advise for low mentality?

2—What would cause puffiness under the eyes?

3—What can be done for a continual tired feeling?

A.—The treatment would depend upon the cause of the trouble. Have a talk with the doctor who is familiar with the patient's condition. He will advise you.

2—This symptom may be indicative of a heart or kidney disturbance or it may be due to possible dissipation. In this case also examination will determine the necessary treatment.

3—Low blood pressure, anemia, autointoxication or a generally run-down condition may be at the source of the trouble. Have an examination and follow your doctor's advice regarding treatment.

FATHER, Q.—What can be done for hot, perspiring feet; also blisters on the toes? My shoes seem comfortable, although I am on my feet a good part of the day.

A.—These are more or less common ailments. Changing the shoes and socks as frequently as possible will bring about increased comfort. Foot baths should prove soothing under the circumstances.

Correct Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

The Lady's Privilege

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When a young man takes a girl out and they are returning home, is it correct for her to suggest that they take a street car when he suggests that they take a taxicab?

2. When a young man takes a girl to a dance where their wraps are checked together, does the girl give the young man her wraps to check with his, or does she check her own?

K.

1. Yes, if she prefers to take a street car instead of a taxicab, she may say so. With the woman rests this kind of privilege, and she need never hesitate to state her preference, if she has one.

2. In this case the girl would give the young man her wraps to check with his.

In a Public Conveyance

Dear Miss Beeckman:

When entering a street car or bus (with a gentleman) is it proper for a young lady to wait until the fare is paid, or should she immediately walk down the aisle and be seated?

F. T.

It is not necessary for her to wait until the fare is paid. She goes and takes her seat in the car.

Addressing Postal Cards

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

First of all I must thank you for the wonderful advice I obtain by reading your column.

Recently I read your article on the form of addressing postcards. You emphasized the fact that when addressing a card you should address it to both the husband and the wife, even though you only know the husband or wife.

Here is my problem: I do not know the husband's first name, but I do know the wife's. How should I address the card? Could I address it as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Alice Brown,
470 Hemlock Street,
San Francisco.

Please tell me what to do in regard to this matter.

A. G.

Thank you, first, for your appreciative words . . . they were most kind.

Since you do not know the husband's first name, it would be quite correct, if you have no way of finding out what his name is, to address the card without the first name. Like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Brown,
470 Hemlock Street.

Do not, in any case, address the card in the first name of the wife.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Vanishing creams were designed for the purpose of making powder stick to one like a friend and a brother. They must be frictioned over the skin until they do the disappearing act.

Ears are having an outing. Showing the ears gives a girl a nice sleek, well-brushed look. The lobes should be powdered carefully, back as well as front, and there should be a rosy color applied, just enough to tell the world that those ears belong to those cheeks, that there is a cosmetic bond between them.

Plastic surgeons can make dimples to order. Also they can take a bit of scalp with its growing hair, and of it make a new eyebrow if the old one has been destroyed. There was a time, a few years back, when some of our most-go-getting stars got permanent blushes by movie means of the tatoo needle and red ink. Will wonders keep on coming? Yazzum. They will.

Hollow cheeks can be plumped by blowing them out and relaxing. A special massage movement is helpful. Apply a heavy emollient, spread out thumb and fingers over the cheek, bring them together in a quick, forceful clawing fashion. The idea is to rouse up the blood streams of the large trumpeters' muscle, strengthening it, toning out.

Beware of a certain type of poisonous, night-blooming beauty. You see it in the night clubs in the wee, sma' hours. It isn't the kind of beauty a young gal should try to copy; it may carry the face of a cherub, but it is selfish, greedy, gaudy and vulgar, and belongs to the class known as gold-diggers. The gimme face has a hard line around the lower jaw. It is too free with its display of rouge, eye shadows and lipstick. It doesn't know it, but it is out of date. Subdued, discriminating makeup is fashion's edict at this particular moment.

Household Hints

Molasses cookies are good for the children as they furnish iron as well as satisfy that sweet craving. Make them frequently and substitute them for candy.

If you wish to dry blankets, counterpanes or quilts quickly, hang them over two parallel lines instead of one line. They will dry in half the time and will not have to be turned. Have the lines about a yard apart.

It is very difficult for the housewife whose hands are in water constantly to keep her hands dainty during the cold weather, but if vinegar is applied after all washings, while the hands are still soft and the pores open from the water, it will keep them smooth and white and prevent chapping.

Fill the steaming tea kettle through the spout if you want to avoid burned hands. A small funnel in the spout facilitates matters.

Economy experts warn us against turning on the gas full force and then applying the match, saying that the slight explosion affects the meter and sends it forward rapidly. Turn on the gas gently, light, and then turn it on full force.

When sewing snaps on a garment sew the half with the projecting point on first. Then press down firmly on the material in the place where the corresponding snap is to be sewn. This will leave a distinct impression in the goods to show you just where to put the snap.

FOCH ATTEMPTED TO CO-ORDINATE ALLIED ARMIES

PERSHING TELLS OF NEW AIM TO USE TROOPS

that it would increase their confidence in the successful outcome of the war, and above all they needed help.

No doubt much of this was true, but it would have opened the way for similar concessions to the other Allies and in the end our forces would have been frittered away, probably to little or no purpose. These appeals by the Allies, presented anew from time to time, only served to fix in our minds the idea that each was thinking in terms of its own army rather than of benefit to the Allies as a whole.

Mr. Baker returned from London that evening and I met him at the Gare du Nord in Paris. The station presented a scene that could never be forgotten. The terror-stricken crowds from threatened villages and farms were fleeing, they knew not whither, many of them for the second time during this war, from an enemy whose invasion of their country in days gone by had perhaps driven out their fathers and mothers before them.

Refugees Suffer

War in its effects upon the armies themselves is frightful enough, but the terror and the suffering that it causes women and children are incomparably worse.

These thousands were leaving everything behind them, going to some distant part of their country to become, many of them, dependent upon their friends, others, perchance friendless and penniless, to live by charity as a burden to the community, or beg from door to door. There was even then hope that they might return later, and through the help of the government rebuild their homes.

But will the shadow of this dreadful experience ever pass, or will war come again to cause like suffering to their children?

No one can answer, but all can strive to the end that this experience, which is the heritage of lands where the embers of hatred and jealousy are kept alive at the fireside to be fanned into flaming war by ambitious and powerful leaders, may come no more.

My diary notes the following:

"Chaumont, Friday, March 29, 1918. Held conference with the Secretary of War and Gen. Bliss yesterday on joint recommendation of Military Representatives of the War Council.

"Left Paris this morning for Chaumont.

"At Petain's request, the 1st Division ordered to battle line, which Mr. Baker said people at home would enthusiastically approve.

"Mr. Paul Cravath dined with us this evening, and speaking of unity, favored placing control in the hands of a committee composed of Marshal Haig, Gen. Petain and myself."

The situation had become so serious that the military representatives seemed to think it necessary to recommend that all previous plans for the shipment of American troops be disregarded and that nothing but infantry and machine gun units be shipped until otherwise directed by the Supreme War Council. This they did in the form of a joint (or unanimous) note, which was, of course, approved by the Supreme War Council.

Mr. Cravath

Objections Found

I was very much surprised at the attitude of Gen. Bliss, our military representative with the council, as without his consent the joint note could not have been submitted to the council.

The presence of the Secretary of War afforded me the opportunity to discuss with him not only the demands of the particular situation existing at that time, but the general attitude of our Allies regarding the manner in which Americans should be employed.

When the joint note was presented to Secretary Baker, I pointed out to him and Gen. Bliss that the proposal, if approved by the President, would place the disposition of American units entirely in the hands of the Supreme War Council and take them quite out of our control, even for training, and would without doubt destroy all possibility of our forming an American army.

The Secretary was as strongly opposed to any such an outcome as I, and after some discussion he dictated his views in a cable to President Wilson explicitly recommending that the control of our forces should be retained by our Commander-in-Chief and that the joint note be approved only in that sense.

Secretary Baker's cable to the President read, in part:

"The foregoing resolutions (of the military representatives on the Supreme Council) were considered by Gen. Bliss, Gen. Pershing and me. Paragraph 3 proposes a change in the order of shipment of American troops to France and necessarily postpones the organization and training of complete American divisions as parts of an independent American army. This ought to be conceded only in view of the present critical situation and continued only so long as that situation necessarily demands it.

Makes Recommendations

"The question of replacements will continue to embarrass the British and French governments, and efforts to satisfy that need by retaining American units assigned to them must be anticipated, but we must keep in mind the formation of an American Army, while, at the same time, we must not seem to sacrifice joint efficiency at a critical moment to that object. Therefore, I recommend that you express your approval of the joint note in the following sense:

"The purpose of the American government is to render the fullest co-operation and aid, and therefore the recommendation of the military representatives with regard to the preferential transportation of American infantry and machine gun units in the present emergency is approved.

"Such units when transported will be under the direction of the commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, and will be assigned for training and use by him in his discretion. He will use these and all other military forces of the United States under his command in such manner as to render the greatest military assistance, keeping in mind always the determination of this government to have its various military forces collected, as speedily as their training and the military situation will permit, into an independent American Army, acting in concert with the armies of Great Britain and France and all arrangements made by him for their temporary training and service will be made with that end in view."

This action by the military representatives just at this crisis was intended to put the weight of the Supreme War Council behind the idea of maintaining the strength of Allied units by Americans as a policy. The text of the joint note made it entirely plain that this was their purpose.

Wilson Approves

The message forwarding the joint note with Mr. Baker's comment was answered by cable from Washington, dated March 30, which stated:

"The President concurs in the joint note of the permanent military representatives of the Supreme War Council in the sense formulated in your number 67 March 28, and wishes you to regard yourself authorized to decide questions of immediate co-operation or replacement."

It was thought that this statement, coming from the President, would check, at least for the time being, the demands of the Allies that we provide units for building up their divisions, but their insistence continued.

The President's message was followed March 30 by a cable from the department, which stated:

"The recommendations of Secretary of War to President ... that preferential transportation be given to American infantry and machine gun units in present emergency understood and will be followed."

It went on to say that these units pertaining to three divisions, the 3d, 5th and 77th, would be sent at once, and those of three other divisions about May 1.

Replying April 3 to the department's cable, I emphasized that it was "not intended that our units shall replace the losses of British or French organizations, and therefore our artillery should be held in readiness to follow when called for," although it was possible that the situation might become "so serious that some of our infantry units will be forced to serve with British temporarily."

Foch Chosen

My intentions were further indicated by saying: "Americans must not lose sight of the purpose to build up divisions and corps of their own," and also "We must avoid the tendency to incorporate our infantry into British divisions where it will be used up and never relieved."

My cable recommended that the infantry of two divisions should be sent by British shipping and two by our own, but that present plans should go no further than this. It was my purpose not to become too deeply involved in an agreement that would make it impossible later to form our own independent force under our own officers.

With reference to the meeting at Doullens, mentioned in the preceding chapter, there was much difference of opinion on what course to pursue, according to Gen. Bliss, who reported the situation to the Secretary and me. President Poincare presided, M. Clemenceau, M. Loucheur, Lord Milner, Marshal Haig, Gen. Sir Henry Wilson, Gen. Foch and others being present.

Sir Henry

One suggestion made prior to the formal meeting was that M. Clemenceau be selected Allied Commander-in-Chief, with Gen. Foch his Chief-of-Staff, but, as we have seen, the conference itself agreed that Gen. Foch, as the senior military member of the council, should be charged with co-ordinating the action of the Allied armies on the Western Front.

Congratulated by Wilson

It was, however, the prevalent British view that Foch was simply a liason officer between the two armies, with advisory and co-ordinating authority only. Although inadequate to meet all circumstances, even this concession was a stride in the right direction, and his position was soon to be more clearly defined. In fact, President Wilson sent Gen. Foch the following message March 29:

"May I not convey to you my sincere congratulations on your new authority. Such unity of command is a most hopeful augury of ultimate success. We are following with profound interest the bold and brilliant action of your forces."

Of course Mr. Cravath's idea for unity of command, as mentioned in my diary, was never seriously considered by anyone in authority, and it fell short of absolute unity of command, but it would have been more likely to have met the situation than the plan adopted by the Supreme War Council, which was a thinly disguised attempt on its part to control military operations.

The failure of the scheme was to have been expected, because it would almost certainly have the effect of relieving the Commanders-in-Chief of their responsibility and placing it in the hands of an agent not empowered to do more than consult the Commanders-in-Chief in an endeavor to get their approval before taking action. It was entirely a makeshift.

It fortunately led to the selection of an Allied Commander-in-Chief, which was probably what some of its farsighted advocates thought would happen.

Harvey's Second Test. | Try to Extend Bouts.
Non-Paid Coach Shines. | Cooper Draws Release.
New Ball Lures Ehmke. | Leonard Still Losing.

BRITON MAY TURN TABLES ON DUNDEE

WHETHER THE DEFEAT of Len Harvey in his first American bout meant that the English middleweight had been overrated a bit, or was due to the strange climate and lack of sufficient time in which to adjust himself, will be demonstrated tonight, when he gets another chance against the same opponent, Harvey and Vince Dundee are to meet again in New York for 12 rounds, and the winner can hardly be denied recognition as the outstanding contender for the 160-pound championship of the world, if that means anything at a time when the leader of the class persistently refuses to defend his title.

Len Harvey

There was nothing fluky about Dundee's victory in the first encounter, and he deserved a lot of credit for the courageous and determined uphill fight he made after being floored twice in the opening round, but it will not be surprising if Harvey turns the tables tonight. The Baltimore Italian's margin on the previous occasion was not great and the better preparation that Harvey has had for the return match looks to be sufficient to overcome the difference.

CERTAINLY DUNDEE CANNOT afford to expose his jaw to Harvey's left hooks again as he did in the initial round of their first clash. He managed to weather a couple of knockdowns that time and to win the decision at the finish, but his success was due to the fact that the Englishman tired rapidly after the half-way mark. Harvey, according to reports, is now in better shape to go the route without letting down.

The tiring of Harvey in the first bout shows how conditions and their effects may be misjudged by even the fighters themselves. Harvey tried hard to get the distance set at 15 rounds, as he had been accustomed to long routes in Europe and figured that the longer the fight lasted the better his chances would be. Dundee, on the other hand, feared 12 rounds would work to his disadvantage and expressed a preference for 10. Yet, if the bout had been only a 10-round affair the decision would have gone to Harveys.

WHEN THE OUTSTANDING basketball coaching feats of the season are being discussed, how about the great job that George Kowallis, mentor of the freshman team at Pitt, has been doing in handling the varsity five as a pinch-hitter for Dr. Cliff Carlson?

It develops that Coach Carlson, suffering from eye trouble, will not be able to make the Eastern trip with the Panthers, and that Kowallis will direct the team against the Army in West Point tomorrow night and against College of the City of New York in New York on Monday night.

ALL OF WHICH brings to mind the fact that Kowallis has been doing a mighty swell turn in that very same role. He has coached the Panthers to two victories over W. & J. and Notre Dame since Dr. Carlson was stricken, and the praiseworthy manner in which he has handled the varsity team in the emergency adds to the evidence of his previous splendid record as freshman mentor that he is one of the best young floor coaches in the country. Kowallis, who played his last basketball for Pitt in 1927, is now a junior in the medical school. He is probably the only amateur college coach in the game. He does not receive a cent from Pitt and gives his services as coach wholly out of love for the sport. He surely has been a great help to the university in the present pinch.

Bill Terry

NEW YORK'S two major league baseball clubs are similarly afflicted. The chief spring woe of each is a holdout first baseman. Bill Terry threatens to be even harder than Lou Gehrig to sign. He has been offered the same salary he received last year, $18,500 for 1931, and is demanding a three-year contract at $30,000 per annum.

With that slight difference, player and club are in perfect accord on the matter of terms. "A contract at the same money I got last year is an insult, nothing less," Terry asserted. "I hit .401 last year and had a great year in the field. In baseball you are paid for what you did last season, and the Giants will have to pay me for what I did in 1930 before I'll sign."

PRESIDENT CHARLES STONEHAM says he can't hear Terry at all. "Look at it from a business standpoint," he remarks. "Three times $30,000 are $90,000 to be paid for 18 months' work. Do you realize that $90,000 represents a 6 per cent income over that period on a $1,000,000 investment?"

"Now I don't think even Terry values himself at $1,000,000. Certainly I don't, and so far as the New York club and I are concerned that $30,000 stuff is out."

SOME OLD PITCHERS who had to abandon trying to hold up their ends when the lively ball was in use, think they may be able to get by in the majors again when the new pellet is brought in this year. One of them is Howard Ehmke. The veteran right-hander, who announced his retirement early last year, is a free agent and privileged to sign with any club desiring his services, but he wants to get back with the A's if possible. So he is going to pay his own way to the spring camp of the Macks, with the understanding that if he shows any promise of a comeback he will be given a contract. Ehmke says his arm feels strong and that the heavy seams on the new ball will make things easier for any pitcher.

PHILADELPHIA BOXING PROMOTERS believe they will have a chance to land the Schmeling-Stribling heavyweight championship fight for the Quaker City next June if a proposed amendment to the Pennsylvania boxing law is adopted as introduced in the assembly by Representative Nat Jaffe, of Philadelphia.

The amendment extends the limit of bouts from 10 to 15 rounds in all cases where championships were at stake. The bill also provides that in all bouts the votes of the two judges and the referee shall be put together, and that in case no two votes are for one fighter the contest shall be automatically a draw.

Benny Leonard

WILBUR COOPER, former Pirate pitching ace, who has been employed in Pittsburgh during the present off-season, is again a free agent as far as baseball is concerned.

The veteran southpaw worked in the Texas League last year. When Shreveport let him go he was signed by San Antonio and made a good record with the latter club during the remainder of the season, but now San Antonio also has given him his unconditional release.

BENNY LEONARD and his hockey associates are still taking it on their collective chin, financially. Shifting the National League franchise from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia has proved only a repetition of the ancient story about the frying pan and the fire. Last season the club lost $64,000 in Pittsburgh, and this season in Philadelphia, where it has won only two games and tied two to date while losing 28, the loss, Leonard says, will reach $80,000. He says it costs $130,000 a year to operate a National League club, salaries having grown until such stars as Howie Morenz and Eddie Shore get $18,000 a season. Benny adds that he means to stick in Philadelphia as his contract there, which has two years more to run, calls for the rink owners to build an arena with a capacity of 15,000. By that time Leonard hopes to have a winning team.

WESTINGHOUSE EXPECTS WIN OVER SOUTH

GAMES TODAY.
CITY LEAGUE
Peabody at Fifth.
South at Westinghouse.
Connelley at Allderdice.
SECTION II.
Langley at Oliver.
Allegheny at South Hills.
Perry at Vocational.

The boys in Section II of the City League may settle on a champion for 1931 this afternoon if Allegheny can topple South Hills, the North Siders will be virtually in.

The contest tops the day's City League card and is the most important of the day. Should South happen to upset Westinghouse in division one that result will rate second in importance, but Westinghouse figures to defeat the Washa baughmen at least as easily as it did in the first round, when South was more formidable than at present.

Allegheny has lost only one game in eight starts in Section II. South Hills has lost two, bowing to Langley in an upset game on Tuesday and to Allegheny in the first round. The only defeat Allegheny has met up with was served by Carrick in the first game of the second half campaign.

PEABODY AT FIFTH

A victory today will just about clinch matters for Allegheny and will force South Hills to win all its remaining contests, provided Allegheny captures the contests remaining on its slate for the Tunnelites to affect even a tie.

Other contests in Section I bring together Peabody and Fifth at Fifth Avenue and Connelley and Allderdice at Allderdice. Schenley, the only team in the section boasting a chance to overtake Westinghouse, will be idle as far as league competition is concerned.

Section II, Langley tackles Oliver and Perry meets Vocational to support the South Hills-Allegheny feature fray.

THREE BIG GAMES

There are three games outstanding in the W. P. I. A. L., which is somewhat lackadaisical in its program for this evening due to the fact that most of the leaders are engaging in unimportant games and others are enjoying off nights.

In Section VII, the up and coming Clairton quintet, which appears to have started its rush too late, may make the going very tough for Duquesne, the defending champions. In its last two engagements, Clairton has beaten Homestead and Scott, two of the more powerful scholastic fives of this section. A victory over Duquesne tonight will boost Homestead into undisputed possession of first place in the section.

In Section XI, Etna invades Swissvale to test the champion Pauline passers. Swissvale leads in the section by just half a game, having played one more than the second place outfit, Wilkinsburg. Etna has won five out of eight, and is formidable enough to cause Swissvale to take its invasion tonight very serious.

BROWNSVILLE IN TEST

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY CARTOONS OF YESTERDAY: CONGRESSMAN ACKERMAN CARRIES SAME UMBRELLA FOR 51 YEARS—Despite the fact that an umbrella is probably the most easily lost article of one's personal equipage, Representative Ackerman, of New Jersey, has succeeded in retaining his for 51 years. Ackerman, who is one of our most widely traveled congressmen, has carried his umbrella constantly in more than 720,000 miles of travel since June 11, 1880, when it was purchased at S. One cubic centimeter of gas is estimated to contain 27,050,000,000,000,000,000 (27 quintillion, 50 quadrillions) of molecules. This number multiplied by the ratio of molecular density between liquid and gaseous matter, and by the cubic contents of a glass of water, converted into grains easily will yield a quantity sufficient to cover the earth.

PINEHURST, N. C., Feb. 13.—By defeating Thomas S. Jamison, of Greensburg, 1 up, in the semi-final here yesterday, Dr. George T. Gregg, of Pittsburgh, National senior golf champion, reached the final of the eleventh annual seniors' tournament. Gregg faces E. C. Keating, of Montclair, N. J., in the final, on the No. 2 course, today.

Jamison made a good stand against the champion, holding him all even at the turn, after being 2 down going to the seventh. Each player went out in 43.

In the fourth division, Lawrence Barr, of Pittsburgh, defeated Eberhard Faber, of New York, 1 up.

The suit which Phil Ball of the Browns has directed against Landis, in reality was against organized baseball and its right to impose regulations on its members.

Georgetown University's Hoyas of basketball are in our midst for a two-day stand. They'll play their first engagement in the city tonight against Duquesne University, and tomorrow will wind up their stay by meeting Carnegie Tech.

Georgetown hasn't been here since the Hilltoppers appeared in the Stadium last winter for a game with Pitt, which they lost by a decisive margin. The outlook for the present stay, from a Hoya point of view, isn't so very bright, for they have to play a team tonight they licked on their own floor some weeks ago, and, tomorrow they will be meeting one of the best this district has this year. All in all, it looks Georgetown merely invaded these parts for the train ride, for last night they lost to West Virginia in Morgantown, after having bowed to the Mountaineers in Washington Monday.

One thing the Hoyas can exhibit against the Dukes tonight, and that is Johnny Scalzi. I don't know what sort of a basketball player Scalzi is, but I do know that he can play football with the best of them. He's been a grid star at Georgetown for three years, and three seasons ago he had Carnegie Tech crazy with his passes in that memorable "bust" in Albany.

The Dukes expect to run into more serious opposition in Georgetown than they did in Catholic U. Wednesday night. Nothing could be easier.

Tartans Ahead

In the parlance of the race track, where short-nosed horses have brought about the foreclosure of more than one mortgage, Carnegie Tech won "pulled up" over American University, of Washington, D. C., in the Tech Gym last night. The score of the ball game was 31 to 21, but I am of the opinion that Carnegie might have increased this advantage to twice its size had they so desired.

At any rate, the locals swung away to a 20-8 lead at half time, employing the varsity performers for the greater part of the first 20 minutes of play. During this time, Bob Smith was good for four goals, Ed Stentz for two, and Capt. Nease, Jim Leonard and Red Fergus for one each.

Coach Buzz Hogan mixed his second and third stringers indiscriminately as the second half got under way, but this conglomeration was unable to do anything important in the way of scoring, and American U., led by Mike Sells, at center, pulled up to within six points of the Schenley Park hopefuls. Then the varsity went back to work and all doubt fled.

Tech didn't have to show much to beat the visitors, and, consequently, didn't. The lineup:

Carnegie—31.		American U.—21
Nease	F	Dick
Smith	F	Woods
Stentz	C	Sells
Leonard	G	Colliton
Fergus	G	Olsen

Score by periods:

Carnegie	20	11—31
American	8	13—21

Substitutes: Tech, Bronson, Webster, Armentrout, Seigal, Foxx, Krause, McGuire. American U., Washburn, Larsen, Field goals, Nease 2, Smith 4, Stentz 3, Leonard 2, Fergus, Webster, Dick 2, Woods, Sells 3. Fouls, Smith, 1 out of 1, Stentz, none out of 2, Leonard, none out of 3, Fergus, 3 out of 4, Webster, 1 out of 1; Dick, 3 out of 5, Woods, 1 out of 8, Sells, 1 out of 1, Olsen, none out of 2, Larsen, none out of 1. Team fouls—Tech, 5 out of 11; American U., 9 out of 17. Time of periods, 20 minutes. Referee—Yans Score by periods: Wallace. Umpire—Walter Waite.

PITT GOES EAST

The Panther passers will entrain for West Point tonight, meeting the Army on its home court tomorrow.

The Pitt squad will not be accompanied by Coach Dr. Carlson, the mentor still suffering from plastic iritis. George Kowallis will be in charge of the squad.

Beede, Westminster Grid Coach, Resigns

SHARON, Pa., Feb. 13.—Dwight (Dyke) Beede, for the past five years head football coach at Westminster College, has resigned, he stated today at his home in Youngstown.

"Westminster officials wanted me to return," Beede says, "but my business prevents me from keeping on. I have no idea who the committee will name for my place."

Beede is a former Carnegie Tech star.

The Westminster Athletic Committee plans to meet in March. It was stated today that Beede had not told school heads of his plans to resign.

The Yellow Jackets and Tecumsehs, who battled it out at London last night, will renew their warfare at Duquesne Garden tomorrow night in a game that will mark the conclusion of the most important week of campaigning in which the local skaters have engaged this season.

Charles Reid, coach of the Pittsburgh puckmen, is confident that the Jackets can get into the International League title playoffs by winning two out of every three games. Last Saturday they downed Syracuse; on Sunday they tied Cleveland, and on Tuesday they defeated the Champion Indians. By winning tomorrow, therefore, the Pittsburgh icemen can keep in step with the Reid victory program.

RIVALS WELL MATCHED

Roy D. Schooley, president and manager of the Jackets, does not expect the teams which are to get into the championship series to clinch their positions until the last week of the season. He says that the play-off rivals are too evenly matched to make any early clinching possible, but he is confident that his stalwarts will be "up there" at the finish.

The Tecumsehs scored a goal in the last minute of play to knot the count, and then used a Pittsburgh penalty as a stepping stone to the victory marker in a thrilling overtime battle the last time they appeared here. Tomorrow's battle gives promise of being another thriller, and a capacity crowd is expected to witness the fray that may make or break the Jackets as title contenders.

Locals in Tie

LONDON, Feb. 13.—London and Pittsburgh battled to a tie before a crowd of 2,800 spectators here last night. With only 13 minutes to play, the Jackets enjoyed a two-goal lead, but the Londoners fought back and scored two tallies in an equal number of minutes to place the teams on even terms. In the overtime both clubs played cautiously, apparently content with a draw.

For 43 minutes the close checking of the Jackets had the Tecumsehs somewhat baffled and it appeared as Pittsburgh had the game in the bag, but the two goals in short order changed the shade of the contest considerably. The draw resulted in London retaining a fivepoint lead over the Jackets.

Rodden opened the scoring after one minute and five seconds of play in the second period when a shot from the right boards placed the visitors in the lead. After seven minutes of the third session Reise, defense player for Pittsburgh, tallied on a long drive from center.

PETTINER SCORES

Pettinger registered London's first goal two minutes later when he took a pass from Elliott at the Pittsburgh goal mouth and beat Goalie Cox. Two minutes later Groh batted in Quenneville's rebound to tie the count. The line-up:

Building Up Big Fights

By IKE DORGAN, The Man Behind Tex Rickard's Fistic Ballyhoos.

CHAPTER XXIX.

When Col. Miller, of the 101 Ranch shows, sent me up into Connecticut to find out all about the wire-pulling propensities of Joe Mulvahill, the Danbury Hatter, he told me to make it fast, as he "wanted to git back to his hosses," if there was nothing stirring in the Nutmeg State.

Ike Dorgar.

The truth wasn't long in getting out of the bag. Mulvahill arranged a final and last word meeting between his forces and myself, the lone spokesman for the Colonel.

I became rather dubious when the Mad Hatter brought me face to face with his henchmen, not in the meeting room of the Chamber of Commerce of South Norwalk, but in the back room of a gin mill. The state leader's right hand man, getting a little huffy, and, I suppose, dubious, too, about 6 in the morning, asked Joe the whereabouts of the 10 grand the Colonel was going to lavish on charity ever so sweet.

"I can't tell you as to that," stammered Joseph.

"Where is the Colonel right now?" asked this impatient politician.

"That I can't tell for sure," stalled Joseph.

THE ELUSIVE 10 GRAND

"He's right in his room at the Astor Hotel in New York," I chirped, "and, if it's just the same to you, I'd love to have you call him up and get his answer on that $10,000. My mother taught me always to be in bed by 9 and I'm long overdue for that hay."

"You get the colonel on the wire," stormed the politician person.

"Yes, sir," said Joe, and he put in a call for the colonel on the wall telephone, right before our noses.

Everyone was holding his breath as Joe asked the colonel if he was that distinguished person.

"Colonel," began the Mad Hatter, "my committee has forgathered here in South Norwalk and we have been going over the situation. Things look rosey, despite a certain tendency to discount your full intentions in this matter of putting on a championship bout with Jess Willard as your ace."

MULVAHILL REPUDIATED

"Never mind that Ralph Waldo Emerson stuff. Ask him about that 10 grand," roared the state leader's outrunner.

"What's that I heard some one say?" came the colonel's voice out of the barrel. Joe paled and answered:

"He's a big shot. He wants to know—eh—er, colonel, when your going to put up that $10,000 for charity—you know, colonel—the $10,000 you promised—"

Well, sir, you would have sworn that the Germans were coming through, right out of that telephone.

You could hear the colonel had gone loco. I swear he must have drawn his gun and shot for the Mad Hatter's eye, right into the telephone. There was a potpourri of beautiful chili con carne cowboy language and then a bang like locomotives meeting head on. The meek Hatter hung up the receiver, and, turning to us, said solemnly:

"Why, the dirty, lying faker refuses to make good. He won't put up the 10 grand."

COLONEL ENRAGED

I waited in a coffee wagon until the first train pulled out for New York. If ever a rising sun deserved to look upon a firing squad putting a Mad Hatter to death, it was the one that came up in South Norwalk that morning.

Waterbury, Mulvahill's proposed battle ground, may not know it until now, but all of the above is why Jess Willard and Fred Fulton did not honor its honorable confines with a struggle for the gilded kelly of fistiana.

I came back to New York and knocked gingerly on the colonel's door. That last blast of his over the telephone in South Norwalk led me to believe that he was on a hair trigger.

I never knew a man could be so mad. He packed up and we went out to St. Paul. He had received a nibble from some of the wise birds out there and the colonel wanted to run it down.

The reformers heard of the colonel's coming, and by the time he got to St. Paul they had hired three of the niftiest orators in the state of Minnesota to thunder down the project of bringing big Jess and just as big Fred into their midst for a title battle. The colonel went in to get an earful of the committee which was to say him yea or nay.

BARRED IN ST. PAUL

He listened for three hours to a red-faced, vein-bulging tirade against boxing and then arose. With his big sombrero, he tried to sell them an idea that he had borrowed from the Mad Hatter of Danbury.

"I'll donate part of the purse to the War Chest," the colonel told them, but, even as he made his plea, he was winked off the subject and told he was up against a stone wall. So, the colonel walked out and wired Jess to meet him in Chicago. The colonel was jolly well through with match-making.

We met Jess according to schedule and the first thing the colonel did was to lay his card on the table, a tiny one with a notation of $3,000 expenses incurred while chasing after a match for Jess. The champion had promised to foot such a bill and there it was. Jess brayed louder than one of his Kansas jackasses ever had. Boys, how he screamed about that tab!

JESS PAYS UP

He tried to crawl out of it by telling the colonel that he would declare him in on the profits of any match he made for the title.

"Nothing doing, Willard," said the colonel.

Pulling a young cannon from the vicinity of his right hip, the colonel slammed it down on the table.

"That bill is going to be paid if we have to remain in this room all summer," growled Miller.

We got out long before fall. I thought Jess would break his wrist reaching for a fountain pen. He wrote out a check for the full amount. The colonel plucked his gat from the table and so ended another chapter in the hunt for a fight for Jess Willard's especial benefit.

ROSE BATTLES BILLY HOLT

By HARRY KECK, Sports Editor.

The usual Friday night Moose Temple professional show and two amateur cards are slated for the boxing fans of the Pittsburgh district tonight.

Billy Rose

Billy Rose, of Cincinnati, who recently starred in beating Jimmy Kelly, of the North Side, in the Moose ring, returns to oppose young Billy Holt, Negro puncher of the Homewood A. C., in the 10-round windup at the Moose. The Linwood A. C. stages a benefit amateur show and entertainment for the needy of the Lincoln avenue district, in the Penn Armory, and the H. T. Little Club, of Homestead, puts on a program of Simon-pure bouts in Sokol Hall there.

Promoter Apples Meyers, of the Moose, has arranged a good preliminary card for his show. In the semi-final, he has Hal Murray, of Harrisburg, and Al Ghan, of Columbus, O., both of whom have won decisions over Harry Fine at the Moose, pitted against each other. His second bout is between Sammy Burns, promising Negro, of the Hill, and Jimmy Reilly, of McKeesport, while Jim Herman, Negro welterweight, of the North Side, takes on Buddy Stewart, of Canton, O., and Homewood, in the opener, at 8:30.

BRANNIGAN BOXES AGAIN

Two local rivals of upwards of 20 years ago, Patsy Brannigan and Eddie Sentry, will box an exhibition of three rounds to top off the benefit show in the Armory. Patsy recently put on a good bout as one of the headliners of Father Cox's benefit show in the Moose Temple. Six amateur bouts also are listed, as follows: Paul Monat vs. Andy Kosel, Herdie Chickos vs. Frank Tatomer, Johnny Wasko vs. Johnny Shepler, Billy Wilson vs. Dee Smith, Jack Haller vs. Anthony Zeline and Tony Constantino vs. Georgie Schlie. Other entertainers include: Olga Mundy, Marie Verner, Peggy Manning, Buck O'Day, Punk McPoland, Perry Boys' Quartet, KQV Radio Rascals and Elmer Layden, Duquesne University athletic director, who will give a talk.

George Pirrung, of Homestead, and Johnny Yelonosky, junior heavyweight champion of the Allegheny Mountain Association of the A. A. U., will box the main bout of the Homestead show.

Martin Wins Philly Meet Feature Race

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—A 3,000-mile ocean voyage and two weeks of intensive training on indoor tracks has been crowned with success for Seraphin Martin, leading middle distance runner of France and holder of the world record for 800 meters.

After a disappointing race in the international half mile in the Millrose games last Saturday, Martin showed a return to form last night in winning the classic Meadowbrook 660, feature event of the annual indoor games at Philadelphia's arena. The time of 1:22.4 was the second best time ever made in the Meadowbrook games.

THOMAS BEATS SHADE

Between Rounds

A bout between Paris Canzy and Mickey Duris, rival lightweights of New Castle and Johnstown, has been substituted for the Pete Nugent-Sam Bruce windup at the Castle Bowl, New Castle, Monday night.

Jack Zivic took one look at the big gate at Motor Square Garden last Monday night and decided to begin training for another fling at the sport. He will begin the grind within a week.

Mike Carney, veteran local handler of boxers, whose ace is Buck McLiernan, is confined to the Presbyterian Hospital yesterday, suffering from influenza and rheumatic fever. He has been ill for a couple of weeks.

The winner of the Len Harvey-Vince Dundee 12-round return bout in Madison Square Garden, New York, tonight, is slated to be named middleweight champion of the world in New York State, 'tis said, because Mickey Walker's title has been vacated there. Harvey is a slight favorite although he lost their first meeting, after having Dundee on the floor twice in the first round. Tony Herrera, Mexican flash, makes his second New York appearance against Solly Schwartz, highly-touted English light weight, in the 10-round semi final.

Jack Demsey will referee the jaunt between Joe Trose 10-round count in Erie tonight. Jimmy Thomas, local Negro welterweight, meets Georgie Sotak of Cleveland, in one of two eight round preliminaries.

Cubs Give Hack Wilson Eight Uniforms

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Poor Hack Wilson! The major league home run champion recently signed a fat contract with the Cubs, and now the club has retaliated by limiting him to eight uniforms for the 1931 season.

Wilson has a propensity for getting his suits dirty in a hurry, so the management decided to buy him four uniforms for home use, and four for the road.

COAST SLUGGER PLEASED WITH BUC TERMS

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13.—Gus Suhr, hard-hitting first baseman of the Pittsburgh Pirates, today announced that he had signed his contract for the 1931 pennant race. Suhr announced himself as well pleased with the terms offered him by the Pittsburgh management.

Gus Suhr

Suhr, a former star in the Pacific Coast League, will be an early arrival at the Paso Robles training camp of the National Leaguers.

BUC OFFICIALS PLEASED

News from the Pacific Coast to the effect that Gus Suhr had signed his 1931 contract was pleasurably received at the home office. Pirate officials stated that the information doubtless was correct. Suhr, by the way, is well liked by Owner Barney Dreyfuss and Manager Jewel Ens largely because he hustles and abides by all training rules.

OLD FLOOR RESTORED

MARKET HOUSE AGAIN MADE AVAILABLE

By JULIUS LEVIN

The South Side Market House for years a ballyhooed for basketball teams of that section, again will be available for the popular winter indoor sport as a result of the removal of the miniature golf course which has occupied that hall for two years.

The Fintex team of the County League will have the distinction of being the first to use the remodeled Market House floor next Friday night when it opposes the Brooklyn Visitations, leaders of the American Professional League, in an exhibition contest.

With the installation of temporary bleachers and many improvements in the interior, the Market House shapes up as one of the best playing courts in the section. Fintex will finish the season at this hall.

Revenge will be the objective of Ziggy Kahn's Irene Kaufmann Settlement House passers tonight when they entertain Fintex in a return battle on the I. K. S. floor.

Fintex defeated the Center avenue passers earlier in the season and Kahn's quintet is all set to even that score tonight. Fintex is playing a number of independent games to keep in shape for the County League playoffs and with the addition of Bernard (Buckets) Sandomire as an active player, the champions present one of the best lineups in the district. Sandomire, formerly Coffey, Butler and Amerita star, has been coaching Fintex this season, but will be eligible to play in the playoffs. Sandomire may break into the lineup tonight.

The West Penn League offers two games tonight, the Falcons playing the North Side Bucks and the Hoyles playing Penn Fire. Kingsley House appears at Downtown Y in a County Amateur League game, while B & O is at Atlantic in a Greater Pittsburgh League fray.

Trinty Cathedral will be the opponent of the I. K. S. Reserves in a Wagner Institutional League game, the contest being played prior to the Fintex game. St. Henry's plays at St. Wendelin's in the Catholic Lyceum League, while three contests are offered the followers of the Metropolitan League. Brentwood is at Mt. Washington Triangles, Hill Top Reserves at Penn Cadets, and the Caros at Goodwill Industries.

Ironsides, quoted at 3 to 1, 2 to 1 and even, is the favorite in the winter book on the Agua Caliente handicap, the world's richest stake, to be run at the Mexican track on Sunday, March 22. Seventy horses were nominated for the event and 63 still remain in the field. It's a case of play or pay, which means that you don't get your money back if your horse doesn't start. Odds ranging up to 500 to 1 are quoted. The stake carries an added purse of $100,000, and the estimated value to the winner is $115,000. The field goes over a route of a mile and a quarter. De Swasey, at 8 to 1, is the second choice.

In connection with the coroner's investigation into the death of young Bob Cranshaw, the Negro boxer in a recent bout, a reader suggests that some attention be paid to the neglecting of preliminary boxers in their dressing rooms following bouts. He avers that many managers and seconds leave their charges to shift for themselves while they mingle with the crowd or watch the succeeding bouts, and serious injuries often are disregarded. It is a timely bit of advice and calls for serious consideration.—HARRY KUCK.

W. Langfitt were opposing counsel. It was charged a street car jumped the track at Penn avenue and Seventh street July 9, 1929, and crushed the leg of the boy, who was standing on the sidewalk.

A verdict of $4,500 was awarded Margaret Steinhauser, 401 Fortieth street, in her suit against P. B. Knight, of Houston, for injuries received June 12, 1929, when Knight's automobile struck her car at Grant street and Fifth avenue. She sued for $50,000.

ROGERS CLOSES RELIEF DRIVE

TEXARKANA, Ark., Feb. 13.—(AP.)—Will Rogers ended here last night a crusade unique in the colorful annals of the Southwest.

The sage of Claremore, through the medium of his natural gift of humor, completed his contribution to drought and unemployment victims, which in round numbers totalled approximately $225,000.

It was his last appearance on his tri-state aerial barnstorming tour with Capt. Frank M. Hawks, which has taken him during the past 18 days into 50 towns and cities of Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas.

At Pine Bluff he drew long applause with references to Harvey Couch, chairman of the Arkansas Red Cross, reported in Congress to have effected a compromise in the drought relief appropriation Rogers said:

"Mr. Couch, you know, had to go back to Washington and be tried. Yeah, he brought together Republicans and Democrats, and a lot of folks have been shot for less than that."

Mitchell Lewis Gets Movie Role in Old Melodrama He Was in on Stage

By HARRISON CARROLL.

(Copyright, 1931, by Universal Service.)

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 13.

With his contract to play a part in Cecil B. De Mille's production of "The Squaw Man," Mitchell Lewis completes a cycle.

On October 11, 1905, Lewis appeared with William Faversham in the first stage presentation of the now famous melodrama. It was in Toledo and Lewis played the role of the heavy, "Cash" Hawkins.

Mitchell Lewis

Charles Bickford has this part in the talkie. Lewis will be the Indian chief, Tabywanna.

REMEMBER BROADWAY

Stage actors should not allow the talkies to keep them too long away from Broadway, warns Edward G. Robinson, star of "Little Caesar" and Hollywood's newest comet.

"We have a dangerous tendency to come out here and live on our own fat," explains the screen's foremost gangster. "Contact with an audience is the actor's only sure way of gauging his work, and the wise ones amongst us will return constantly to Broadway to get this first-hand reaction. Also to keep up on the trends.

"My own case illustrates how easy it is to get out of touch. After a year in Hollywood, I went back to the stage this year, and my play was a failure. If I had been in New York all along, I would have known better than to do it. But my hand had been off the public pulse too long."

Movie contracts threaten to keep Robinson from practicing what he preaches. There is small likelihood of his getting back to Broadway for two years, unless Warner Brothers decide to use him in one of their New York stage productions.

HE COULDN'T QUIT

Bill Oliver tells the one about the man who was taken to a Hollywood hospital suffering from a fixed contraction of facial muscles.

"What's the matter," asked an attendant, "Lock-jaw?"

"No," snarled the patient out of the warped corner of his mouth, "I've been working in gangster pictures."

LATEST GOSSIP

Howard (Money Doesn't Matter) Hughes is reported to have paid a $12,000 bonus to get Pat O'Brien out of a New York show and into "The Front Page." The Irish actor now is sewed up on a long time contract . . . Douglas MacLean had an experience at Agua Caliente which shows why men go crazy betting on horses. For eight races, he bet on the horse carrying the number of the race; and won every time. . . . Studio upsets are hailed with joy by Hollywood florists. Charles Rogers, incoming vice president of Pathe, received an office-full of blossoms on his first day in the new job . . . Louise Keaton, Buster's youngest sister, is working in Gloria Swanson's picture. . . . Robert Montgomery's first starring picture, as forecast in this column, will be "The Man in Possession" . . . Fox suddenly has decided to shelve "Merely Mary Ann," which was to have been Janet Gaynor's next picture. For one thing, Charles Farrell has gone to Europe, and, anyway, Janet would rather have a dramatic role.

Mr. Montgomery

HE KNEW HIM WHEN

Walter C. Kelly, "The Virginia Judge," to you, tells it that many years ago in Birmingham, England, he was working on a bill with "The Eight Lancashire Lads." Between acts, one of them came up to him and started asking questions about America. He said he was making two pounds ten a week, and wondered if he could earn that in New York.

Kelly replied newsboys earned that much, and urged the young English vaudevillian to make the trip.

He did and has done right well. His name was Charlie Chaplin.

WYNN, STOCK PLAY OPEN HERE MONDAY

Ed Wynn's show, "Simple Simon," comes to the Alvin next week, beginning Monday night, following a long record-breaking run at the Grand Opera House, Chicago. Supporting Mr. Wynn is a company of 100 singers, dancers, comedians and specialty artists, including Harriet Hoctor, whose dancing in Ziegfeld's "The Three Musketeers" and "The Show Girl" called forth favorable comment.

Seats go on sale Monday morning at the Nixon boxoffice for the engagement of "Making Mary," a musical comedy with a roster of a hundred or more song and dance entertainers, which opens for the first time on any stage in that theater on Monday evening, February 23.

When a family needs a friend there seems to be nothing like a good lawyer. This, in brief, is the moral of "It's a Wise Child," the most recent of David Belasco's successes, which will be produced by George Sharpe in the Pitt next week. The play was seen earlier this season in the Nixon.

Children's Dancing Class in Enright

A dancing school, conducted by the Warner Brothers for children from 6 to 12 years of age, will be inaugurated in the Enright tomorrow morning. It will be under the personal direction of Bob Alton, dance director from the Warner studio in Hollywood.

EDNA MAY OLIVER IN FEATURE COMEDY

Radio Pictures, which have made an outstanding success with Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey as a comedy team, is about to launch another pair of funsters. Hugh Herbert and Edna May Oliver will turn loose a barrage of laughs as a team in a forthcoming feature picture, as yet untitled.

Herbert, prominent playwright, scenarist and director, recently returned to his first love, acting. Years ago he appeared in many stock plays and vaudeville skits of his own creation.

Miss Oliver has a background of almost 30 years on the stage, principally in comedies. She recently was placed under long-term contract by Radio Pictures and has appeared in "Half Shot at Sunrise," "Cimarron" and currently with Wheeler and Woolsey in "Assorted Nuts."

MR. SHERMAN AGAIN ACTING AND DIRECTING

Following renewal of his contract, Lowell Sherman is preparing to launch "Bachelor Apartment," his fourth acting-directing vehicle in Radio Pictures. Irene Dunne, who won considerable praise from critics as the result of her work in "Cimarron" as Sabra Cravat, will play the leading feminine role opposite Sherman.

"Cimarron" was also the stepping stone to further fame and fortune for Rosco Ates, whose contract has been renewed by Radio Pictures for another year. He was also seen in "Check and Double Check" with Amos 'n' Andy.

the amazingly better motor fuel that sells at regular-gas price

YOU "say it with miles" when you put ATLANTIC WHITE FLASH into your tank. For this amazing new gasoline has been scientifically developed to give you more miles to the gallon . . . whether you drive through the maze of city traffic . . . over winding hills and mountains . . . or along the straight, swift roads of level country.

Everything that means economy is here. Many of the items you may never have thought of, but they have all been studied and mastered for you at the great Atlantic research laboratory. And you get them—in ATLANTIC WHITE FLASH—at regular-gas price!

You get truly remarkable ease of starting—a shorter warming-up period—minimum crankcase dilution—extra power. All of these things contribute to greater mileage.

ATLANTIC WHITE FLASH is crystal-clear in color. It has no objectionable odor . . . a very important point if you drive a closed car. Let it help you save your motoring dollars!

OILS, UTILITIES, COPPERS LEAD MARKET UP

Impetus of Recovery Shows Signs of Tiring; Dips Checked; Volume Shrinks

NEW YORK, Feb. 13 (AP).—The long-depressed oil shares were brought forward to smooth the way for the infant bull movement in the stock market today.

The impetus of recovery showed decided signs of tiring as traders gave attention to holiday business, checked profit-taking in copper and other bullish demonstrations. The volume of trading was sharply less than that of Thursday, Wednesday and Tuesday. The total share transactions on the New York Stock Exchange had shrunk spectacularly on Wednesday and had been inclined to go slowly on Thursday.

Oils, utilities and coppers led the way in the recovery movement, substantial inroads being made into the losses of the week. Motors were inactive and rails were heavy as well as irregular.

The oils seemed to be the favorite professional target, with the belief that gasoline prices would be strengthened by the curtailment of production in the Seminole area. In the motor industry remained unsettled by the tapping of new petroleum fields in eastern Texas, contrary to expectation and a moderate buying movement.

The report of copper production for February showed a decrease of 6 per cent. larger than expected. On the other hand, the December report of the Bureau of Mines on petroleum production during 1930 was mildly encouraging, showing a drop from the banner year 1929 of less than 2 per cent. In the previous year of sharp business depression, 1921, power production dropped nearly 6 per cent.

Curtailment of copper production, according to the 1930 report, operated to small extent in 1921 and 1930 total production ranging from 1,000,000 to 1,100,000 tons, a decrease of 14 per cent.

The strength of copper shares was evidently a further response to the one-half-cent-a-pound increase in red metal prices to 10 cents earlier in the week. Remembering the short-lived upturn in prices from 9½ to 12 cents last November, the industry is apparently determined to go slowly. Silver prices reacted sharply losing the 1½-cent-an-ounce advance earlier in the week.

Credit conditions were tranquil.

Railroads Asking Bids on Equipment

The Nickel Plate Railroad is in the market for 10 locomotives according to the Iron Age.

The Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad is reported to have purchased 1,200 hopper cars.

The Western Pacific Railroad is inquiring for five Mallet type freight locomotives.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—Sharp downturns in grains resulted early today from acute weakness of wheat quotations at Liverpool associated with metric-system shipments by Argentina and Russia. Corn receipts in Chicago 325 cars, were larger than either a week or a year ago. Starting 1½ cents off, wheat afterward held near initial range. Corn opened ½ lower and subsequently displayed little power to rally.

Principal Reduced by Distributive Trusts

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

OVER A LONG PERIOD of years the results to be derived by investors from the cumulative and distributive types of fixed investment trusts will show wide variation. Stock dividends and split-ups received by the cumulative trusts are retained in the investment portfolios so that the growth in the prosperity of the underlying investments is steadily adding to the value of the fixed trust shares.

In the distributive type these stock dividends and split-ups are sold and the proceeds are given to the fixed trust shareholders. Naturally the distributive trusts make much larger payments to their shareholders. But since a part of this is really a return of capital the value of the underlying securities is constantly being diluted.

At the termination of a cumulative trust the value should show a large increase which would be comparable to the general economic growth of the country. At the termination of a distributive trust there will not be a true reflection of this national economic growth since a large part of the increased value of the underlying companies will have been returned.

Justification for Distribution

THE INVESTMENT HOUSES sponsoring the distributive trusts state that the average annual increase in the value of the stocks in the portfolio should compensate for any dilution through distribution of capital.

Naturally some compensation for capital distribution may be expected. The extent of it will vary widely with the stocks held in the investment portfolio and with economic conditions existing during the life of the trust.

It is possible to get some indication of the effects of distribution of capital by reference to the retrospective analyses prepared by the houses sponsoring the fixed trusts. These compilations assume the formation of the trust with its present holdings at some time in the past and compute the annual distributions and show the average prices in each succeeding year up to the present time. Such statistics are apt to be misleading. The reasons for regarding them with a shade of doubt will be given in future articles in this series. For the present, however, the figures will serve our purpose.

Value Decreased

THE RETROSPECTIVE ANALYSIS of one of the largest distributive trusts assumes that organization took place in 1912 and that the same stocks were bought as at the time of actual organization. In 1912 the average price of the trust shares would have been $11.25. The average price in 1929 would have been $10.87½, which indicates a depreciation of 8.56 per cent due of distribution of capital. In 1920 the average price would have been $11.50, so that over 10 years depreciation would have been 7.61 per cent.

Another distributive trust starts its calculations in 1913 with a price of $11.50 and shows no change in comparison with the average of 1929. In 1920 the price would have been $12.50. Starting at this point depreciation would have been 8 per cent.

The base year selected has much to do with the results of such comparisons. As instances, practically all the distributive trusts show even greater depreciation in comparison of 1929 with 1916. On the other hand, nearly all of them show appreciation in comparison with 1921. On the basis of comparison of preceding years with the average prices of 1930 large amounts of depreciation would be shown in most cases.

Results from Accumulation

THE CUMULATIVE TRUSTS show a sharply contrasted picture on the basis of similar calculations. One of the cumulative trusts showed a value of $11.12½ a share in 1920 as compared with $47.08¼ a share in 1929 which indicates a gain of 323 per cent. Similar results by the other cumulative trusts indicate the vast difference to be shown over a period of years by the retention of stock dividends and split-ups.

Of course there is nothing wrong about the distributive trusts providing the investors understand that a portion of their income represents liquidation of capital and providing they realize that they are running the danger of ultimately reducing their principal.

Stock Exchange Topics

Radio Industry Looking For Improvement in Current Year.

The radio industry obviously is in better shape. While some inventory sales took place in January, and a few are going on now, they are small and almost normal. Headed by the Radio Corporation those companies which managed to weather 1930 are in good condition as to inventory. Prices have been reduced to meet public ideas of "right" prices, and production is on a schedule to meet a current demand. The radio industry is looking for a better 1931 than 1930. Buying of Radio Corporation common has been transacted recently by persons who were sellers last year. They are looking for considerably higher prices for all the company's securities.

Certain brokers are advising their clients to go slow on selling stocks because of reduced or passed dividends and poor reports for 1930. They maintain that those factors largely have been discounted in most cases, and that unless business gets worse, traders should look into the extent of a stock's decline before selling on news which reflects past performances.

Shares of the Auburn Automobile Company have advanced about 100 points in the last six weeks. The street has looked upon the move as one entirely against the bears. Some of those who bought the stock under 100 are wondering if part of the rise is not predicated on actual business rather than the oft-told bear punishment story. For instance, the company shipped 2,014 cars in January, against 1,632 in the corresponding month a year ago, making the former month the largest January in the company's history. Its February schedules are large.

A sharp advance took place in American Commercial Alcohol on buying by those who believe that the company will show a material gain in earnings this year. In common with U. S. Alcohol, the company suffered severely last year from high-priced molasses. In 1929 it earned $3.22 a share. Under current conditions, it is believed that profits this year should recover to between $2 and $3 a share.

Chinese Silver Market in Turmoil

SHANGHAI, Feb. 13.—(AP)—China's silver market today underwent the most hectic session it has experienced in years as the result of unconfirmed reports that the Nationalist government was planning to declare a moratorium on gold obligations and would seek to establish a gold standard.

The Mexican dollar, China's principal medium of exchange, plunged to a new low level of 19.56 cents gold. The market rallied late in the afternoon when the minister of finance denied the government was planning a moratorium or taking the measures to adopt the gold standard.

A distinctly better feeling exists in copper circles. Anaconda, which has been a speculative favorite since it sold under $30, once again is being sought by many followers of the metal shares. Any stimulation in business, be it ever so slight, will cause some manufacturers to enter the market for the red metal. Western Electric, which bought a large quantity of metal a few months ago when prices of copper were around 10 cents, is reported to be in the market again for a large amount of red metal to take care of Bell systems needs.

Substantial buying of Drug, Inc., has taken place in the last few days on the belief that 1931 will be a good year for the company. It is estimated that the company earned about $6 a share on the junior shares in 1930, and will show a strong balance sheet.

Weirton's Electric Mill Starts Monday

The Weirton Steel Company's Clarksburg (W. Va.) tin plate plant, which was suspended recently for the installation of electric motive equipment, will begin operations Monday with 400 men in the hot mills. Six hundred more will be added as other departments resume 10 days later.

Stocks Rise Toward 1929 Panic Lows

By B. C. FORBES

ALTHOUGH MANY do not like to think so it is a fact that cheerfulness in Wall Street has a stimulating influence on industry, on business, on agricultural prices, on practically the whole nation. And, of course, depression in Wall Street also has equally widespread influence.

Mr. Forbes

That is one reason why events in the stock market are of far-reaching importance in our national life.

How do stock market values compare today with those recorded at the height or depth—of the 1929 panic?

THE WRITER then recommended the purchase, not on margin but outright, of good stocks, on the theory that past experience had proved that such action had always been profitable.

The writer frankly confesses that he did not then feel that the inevitable business depression would drag along for so great a period or that stocks would sink and sink far below their panic lows.

Do stocks purchased at the panic bottom in 1929 show today losses or gains?

Speaking broadly, industrials on Wednesday sold very close to the 1929 minimum; utilities show more advances than declines; railroads are lower.

IT SO HAPPENS that this column has long regarded utilities as distinctly more promising than rails. Looking ahead five or 10 years there is no profound reason for expecting rails to do as well as strong public utility and ably-managed industrial corporations. On the other hand, oils have proved a distinct disappointment.

THE FOLLOWING table gives the 1929 panic low for representative industrial and miscellaneous companies, the highs registered on Wednesday, and the gain or loss:

I AM DAILY asked:

"What do you think of the market's sudden rise?"

It would have been better, in my opinion, if the market had moved more slowly and less spectacularly. Outbursts of abnormal bullishness, accompanied by extraordinary swelling of activity, often peter out overnight, often prove only a flash in the pan.

However, even such a demonstration as this latest is distinctly more encouraging than a fresh downswing would have been. We have had more than enough of bearishness, more than enough of liquidation.

Anything calculated to inspire a modicum of cheerfulness is to be welcomed.

IT STILL remains true that what needs changing most of all is our state of mind. If Wall Street can do that—and it assuredly will, now or later—then, bless it!

Norfolk's Recapture Income Determined

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Excess railway operating income of Norfolk and Western Railway, subject to recapture by the government, has been tentatively fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission as $15,849,334, or one-half of the total, $31,698,689, found as the total excess railway operating income of this road up to the end of 1926. The period covered in the tentative determination runs from September 1 to December 31, 1920.

TIGER HEART -:- By Robert Terry Shannon

Duke Discovers That Jim Has Disappeared

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Connie Calvert shares her home and fortune with her half-sister, Kitty, whom she found destitute in New York's underworld. Kitty falls in love with Jim Tracy, Connie's former fiance. Believing Jim to be a fortune-hunter, Connie, to save Kitty, enlists the aid of Duke Garson, Kitty's friend and underworld intelligence man. He warns Connie that her butler is a crook and that her mother should guard her pearls. Later, Duke is about to declare his love for Connie when Jim appears. He claims he was held up and is afraid to go home. Connie invites him to stay. Duke doubts Jim's story. That night, Mrs. Calvert's pearls are stolen. Duke questions the maid about them. The maid doubts Kitty's honesty. Mrs. Calvert becomes ill after the excitement. Duke accuses Jim of lying about being held up. Jim says he lied because he did not trust Duke and wanted to get back to the Calvert home. Connie tells her mother that she is not sure whether she loves Duke. Duke seeks the butler's aid to solve the robbery mystery. The butler suspects the maid. While out riding with Connie, Duke says she is a new thrill in his life. When he kisses her she is powerless to resist. Late that night Connie is alarmed when she hears a noise in the house. She summons Duke and he discovers the maid hiding in a closet. She refuses to give an explanation. Connie and Duke take a note they see under Jim's door. It is from the maid, confessing her love for him and intimating she has the pearls.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER LIX.

Connie went to the kitchen and made coffee, happily defiant of the possibility of lost sleep. On such a night when the interest of her life had reached an apex, what did a few hours' sleep matter? Tonight what she wanted was full, vivid consciousness—all of it that could be concentrated in these hours before dawn.

Her love for Duke Garson found a solid background stretching behind the poignant interest of the solved mystery of her mother's pearls. In her love, at least, she could be secure; no sort of twist of fate could rob her of her mystical union with Garson. It was around her everywhere, like the air she breathed. Realization came to her that love was just that—a background. Life would go on as usual, problems, troubles and joys would keep occurring; but these things were no more than play-acting before a painted curtain. To be in love—that was the real business of life . . .

Discuss Situation

"I'm more afraid than ever for Kitty to go on with Jim—" She referred to Mary Smith's letter. "Aren't you? There must be something fundamentally wrong about him, or he wouldn't have attracted that poor creature and tempted her to be a thief. Of course, he didn't know she was going to steal for him, but all the same he was not above stooping to flirt with her—a simple, ignorant servant girl—"

"I don't want to think about anything on earth but you," Garson protested. "Other people's affairs—they seem so trivial to me now!"

"Oh, I know—I feel that way myself," Connie told him, intently, sitting with both her hands in his. "But we have our whole lives to think of each other, Dale. I want Kitty to find someone as wonderful as you are before she thinks of getting married. I don't want to see her marry Jim. I don't!"

"It's a stone wall you're running against when you batter at a girl's love for a man," Garson mused. "I wonder if she really cares for him—or if it's not a sort of intoxication created by her freedom, her release from the cramped life she lived on Tenth avenue? At first I was against you when you wanted to break up the match; but you're right—Tracy will bring her unhappiness if she marries him. And if she doesn't, the situation may be worse."

"A man who could make love to Mary Smith, even in the slightest degree, is not the man for Kitty," Connie added. "I wonder what would happen if we showed her this letter that Mary wrote to Jim."

"I don't think it would change her in the slightest."

"You're so wise," Connie said, meaning it honestly. "Can't you see a way out for her, Duke?"

He smiled ruefully. "When you are close to me, when your lips are so near—" He leaned forward a matter of inches, and kissed her. "When you're so close, dear girl, I can't think of anything but you."

He had been holding his saucer and cup of coffee; abruptly he put them down on a low table, got up and walked to a window and lit a cigaret. "You see, I'm in a daze with your loveliness, and there's got to be a little distance between us before I can think clearly."

"You're making fun of me," she protested.

"No, I mean it, every word of it. There, now, I'm beginning to have an idea. Suppose—suppose we leave Kitty alone, and work on Jim."

"How? Suggest something more—"

"I can't see much beyond that idea," Garson admitted frankly. "Here's what we might do: Suppose we call Tracy down and show him this letter, then put it up to him straight. Tell him that we're the two people most responsible for Kitty—I'm her best friend, you her sister. What do you suppose would happen?"

Suggests Scheme

"I'm afraid he would laugh in our faces," Connie said, morosely.

"Probably—at first. Let's develop the idea a little more. The assumption is, of course, that he does not love Kitty. I can't believe he does. Her youth, prospective money, her good looks, attract him—and that's all. It isn't a question of heartbreak with him. He's merely playing for a stake, like a gambler. Suppose we told him that if he married Kitty she would not get a cent out of the estate. Actually, if the case ever got into court it could be fought and postponed and juggled around until it would be all used up before she could collect a cent. If Tracy were convinced that Kitty was, for a fact, penniless, I wonder how much courting he would do?"

Connie nodded. It was a faint hope of solution, but the only thing that occurred to either of them.

"Let's find out what he says," she agreed. "Do you want to get him up now and bring him down here?"

"I know of no better time to settle it, or try to," Garson declared.

Alone, while Garson went upstairs to rouse Jim Tracy, Connie leaned back and stretched deliciously. She wanted, desperately, to be done with worrying about Kitty. There was so much joy, so many thrills, just around the corner for her and Duke. Never before had she realized what a lifting, expanding sensation love meant to the human heart. It nullified all value in life when, even if Duke had been a crook, she forgave him. She was glad, though, that he had money of his own—but she would have married him, gladly, had he been a pauper. The only thing about money was that it was useful. The dollar was the servant of love, but that was only slightly important. Millions of people lived gloriously without service . . .

The presence of Duke coming down the stairs, his feet making small sounds on the rugs across the floor, thrilled her. If necessary, she could have forgiven him anything . . .

His expression, as he stood before her, was strangely baffled. "Is Jim coming down?" she asked him.

"I don't know," he said, in an odd tone. "He's not in his room!"

DAILY TRUE STORY

Rewarded

"The thing to do now, Benny, is to hang out your sign and let all the world know that you are a lawyer!"

Mrs. Luther smiled approvingly at Benny. She could already see, in her mind's eye, the sign:

BENJAMIN GREGORY,
Attorney-at-Law.

Mrs. Luther knew well enough that she was slated to become Ben Gregory's mother-in-law.

This pleased her. She would take delight in saying to her many acquaintances, "My son-in-law, Lawyer Gregory."

Mrs. Luther was like that. She lived on an income just sufficient for herself, a comfortable but unostentatious living. Lora, her daughter, worked in a downtown office because she knew well enough just how far her mother's income would go, which wasn't quite far enough for both of them.

Lora and Ben were very much in love. They had been for two years. As soon as Ben became a full-fledged lawyer they hoped to marry. But Ben secured his admittance to the bar about the time so many thousands were seeking admittance to bread lines.

The prospects for setting up a brand new law office were too small to be considered.

"Yes," Mrs. Luther repeated, "now you will open your office and be one of the great legal profession. It will make Lora so happy."

"Ummm," said Ben, hesitatingly, glancing at Lora inquiringly.

Applies for Position

"Now, mother," Lora said, going to the rescue, "law is a necessity only once where it is a luxury nine times, and in these days who can afford luxuries?"

"Do you mean that Ben isn't going to start practicing law?"

Mrs. Luther was aghast at the thought. She had told scores of her acquaintances that her daughter was soon to marry a practicing lawyer.

"We thought—I mean, I have investigated, and it seems to be best right now for me to go into some firm until the depression is over."

"Work for somebody else, Ben? What a silly idea!"

"My father did many big favors for John Kenston," Ben explained to Lora, "and I haven't a doubt in the world but what he would take me into his firm."

Ben went down the next day to see the Honorable John Kenston.

They were spacious and impressive offices. A pale youth at a table by the door asked Ben what his business might be. Ben told him that it might be any number of things, but it so happened that he came to see Mr. Kenston.

"I will turn you over to our appointment clerk," he said.

This was pretty swank, it seemed to Ben.

The appointment clerk was a strikingly handsome girl. She was using the telephone. She smiled and motioned to Ben to take a seat. He did so and watched her. The position of appointment clerk with the Kenston outfit must pay pretty well. The girl was expensively dressed, coiffured and jeweled. Ben's sharp eyes took in every detail.

"Tell him it is the late James Gregory's son, please," Ben said.

This took Ben into the great private office of the Hon. John Kenston himself. Ben guessed that he could run an office five years on just what the furnishings cost in this place.

Ben's greeting was hearty. Kenston remembered his father. And he regretted that there wasn't an opening. "I couldn't find a place here now for my own brother — next fall, perhaps—"

The usual line.

Ben went out greatly discouraged. It meant a postponement of his marriage. The fact that Kenston went out with Ben to his appointment clerk and said, "Miss Swazey, put aside all formality any time Mr. Gregory here wishes to see me and send him in," didn't help Ben in the least.

Ben and Lora made the most of it. Each would save and when the sun of prosperity shone again he would have funds for opening an office of his own.

For three weeks Ben worked, doing a few minor little tricks and it seemed to him that he wasn't half earning his pay.

"Here's the usual thing, Gregory," his boss said one day. "Some dame thinks her jewels have been stolen. Run up and see if she is an actress or if she left them on the washstand."

Ben took the slip and glanced at it.

"I know her husband—big lawyer," Ben told him.

"So much the better. Get the dope and if it's a real case I'll put Harris on with you—no offense, you know, but you're green yet at this thing."

Meets Mrs. Kenston

Ben nodded and went up town to the truly luxurious home of the Hon. Kenston.

Mr. Kenston had come home meanwhile. When the butler ushered Ben in Kenston frowned.

"Look here, Gregory. Sorry, but I can't give you a place in the office, not even if you make it a personal matter like this—"

"Law? Oh, I've worked my way up from that to the detective profession, Mr. Kenston. I was sent by the Argus—"

"Are you the detective, sir?"

It was Mrs. Kenston, just notified by the butler that her detective had arrived.

Ben admitted it. John Kenston smiled tolerantly.

"Good," he said.

"It is my Hallingsford emerald that was stolen, you must have heard of that."

Ben shook his head.

"It was presented to an ancestor of mine at the court of Queen Victoria. I don't know when it was stolen. I hadn't been to my jewel safe for weeks and weeks."

Kenston departed.

Mrs. Kenston remembered a picture of the ring, made for a magazine article on jewels some years before. Ben took the photograph and promised to do his best.

The next day he went down to the office of the Hon. John Kenston. He walked past the pale youth at the door table and into the little office of the appointment clerk.

"Ah, Miss Swazey, may I see Mr. Kenston?"

"Certainly, Mr. Gregory."

She had remembered her instructions.

"Don't tell me you have a clue so soon?" boomed Kenston when Ben went into his office.

Ben nodded and sat down.

"I'd like to make you a bet of five thousand—"

"I don't want any guess work. I want to know where to put my hand on the ring, young man!"

Made Junior Partner

"A bet of five thousand that you'll give me a junior partnership in your firm before I leave."

"Done—anybody as foolish as that deserves to lose."

"I have left with my fiancee a letter addressed to your wife. If I do not show up at 11 o'clock today and show my fiancee papers proving that I am junior partner here, she will at once deliver in person this letter to your wife. The letter tells her where she can put her hand on that emerald—where you have probably put your hand on it many times of late—"

"What—what—is this blackmail?"

"Call in Miss Swazey—or shall I go out to her now and get the ring? I see she is still wearing it!"

The Hon. John Kenston sat motionless for a moment, then pushed a button. A clerk came. He introduced Ben.

"Make out the papers, Mr. Gregory. I am proud to say, has consented to join us as junior partner."

The clerk went out.

"Might the junior partner give some advice?"

"He might."

"Have a duplicate made of the ring and I will 'find' it for you. Pay me the five thousand we bet and I want two weeks for my honeymoon. I must hurry and show these partnership papers to Lora."

"Your advice is good—here's my check—that is also good. Hurry back from your honeymoon. Your are going to be a valuable member of our firm, Gregory!"

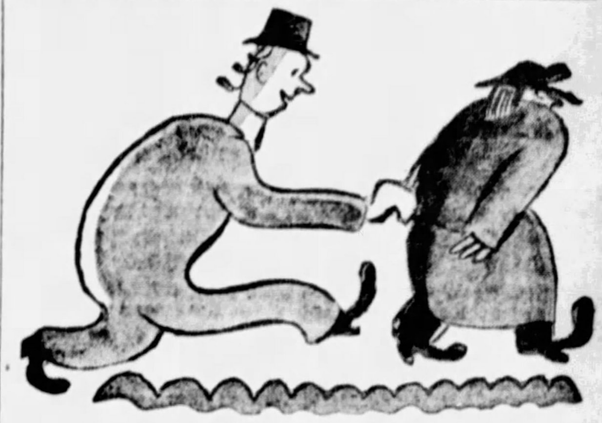
FRISBY INTERVIEWS PROF. EINSTEIN FOR POSTERITY



By GUY GIFFORD
(Staff Correspondent)

PASADENA.—Congressman Horace Walpole Frisby today granted an interview to Doctor Einstein. They met at a prominent street intersection.

"I am glad to bump into you," said Prisby, offering his umbrella to the great scientist. "Birds of a feather should flock together. I, too, am very much misunderstood."

As Prof. Einstein hurried across the street, Congressman Frisby graciously followed.

"Now," said Mr. Frisby, when he had reached the other side, "for the benefit of my millions of followers I would like to ask a few questions that will take some thinking on your part to answer. I sincerely hope we understand each other. First, what do you think of the Pacific Ocean as deep as you have gone?"

Prof. Einstein made no reply.

"Another question," continued Frisby, encouraged. "What kind of cigars do you smoke? Thanks, that is also my brand."

In a moment the interview belonged to the ages.

When a person places a Classified Ad in a newspaper, the idea in mind is to place the message before a large number of prospects. When your ad runs in the Sunday Sun-Telegraph it will go to the largest group of readers ever reached by any Pittsburgh newspaper. What have you to Rent, Sell or Exchange?

County Gets a Bargain

Purchase of P. & W. Va. Bridge and Tunnel Appears to Have Been a Good Stroke of Business.

This is an excellent time to pick up bargains, and the county has got one in the purchase of the Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railroad bridge and tunnel at $3,000,000.

Virtually every doubt that it was a good stroke of business is dispelled by the alacrity with which the minority County Commissioner, C. C. McGovern, that "watchdog of the county treasury," assented to the deal.

It is unusual for Col. McGovern and Commissioner E. V. Babcock to co-operate, and it is pleasant to see them in such a relationship when it means, as in the case of the tunnel, that they are pulling together for the public good.

It will hardly be disputed that the county could not construct itself a bridge and tunnel at the price involved in the Pittsburgh and West Virginia deal. And then there is the additional advantage that the people get the use of this badly needed new artery of communication several years sooner than would be possible under the other plan.

Voting Machine Action

Zeal to Have Devices Installed in Every Election District of County for Primary Is Laudable.

The County Commissioners have shown commendable zeal in the new movement that has been launched to get voting machines.

Chairman Armstrong promises that the devices will be installed in every election district in time for the primary election in September.

The citizens will approve on the whole the haste that is now being made. While it is true that the Commissioners have been told of a new type of machine that would cost less than those now on the market, the time limit will soon be reached within which, under the law, the county will have to be supplied with voting machines. Hence the Commissioners cannot be blamed for being unwilling to wait for the perfection of the new kind of machine, which, in the end, might not be satisfactory anyway.

They are following the best course in re-advertising for bids and stipulating that the successful bidder must provide the machines by August 15.

The primary election will be a hard fought one in all probability, and it is desirable that everything possible be done to prevent fraud.

Pope's Radio Address

There Is Cause for Pride in Remembering That Pittsburgh Paved the Way for Momentous Event.

Nowhere, it is suspected, was the radio address of Pope Pius XI yesterday listened to with greater interest than in Pittsburgh. For, in addition to the reasons that existed throughout the world for attending carefully to what the Pontiff said, we had cause for attenion in the fact that Pittsburgh paved the way for the momentous event.

Radio broadcasting originated here. KDKA is the pioneer station. Religious services were first placed on the air from Pittsburgh. The first priest to deliver a radio address was the Rev. Dr. Thomas F. Coakley, pastor of Sacred Heart Church. At the time of his speaking, more than 10 years ago, he predicted that the voice of the Pope would one day be heard in all parts of the world.

The fulfillment of Dr. Coakley's prophecy was auspicious for Pittsburgh and for the world.

Opportunity to Repay

Sixteen Well-Known Citizens Call Attention to Pittsburgh's Indebtedness to Philanthropic Jews.

Sixteen well-known citizens, not Jews themselves, have united in a letter to the people of Pittsburgh calling attention to the kindness that Jews have shown in their attitude towards community philanthropies and suggesting that an opportunity is now open to the non-Jewish population to reciprocate.

Jews have always supported Pittsburgh's philanthropies. Again and again they have contributed generously to our hospitals and charitable associations and institutions of learning. All this time they have supported their own Jewish philanthropies independently, asking nothing from the non-Jewish citizens.

But they are having a hard time raising the $450,000 that is required this year for the work of the 17 organizations composing the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. That is why the 16 Christian leaders have made the appeal in the Jews' behalf.

It is to be hoped there will be a generous response.

An Appalling Situation

How Much Was the Doctor to Blame for Circumstances Surrounding Case of Alma Rubens?

Have you come to the doctor yet?

The doctor who stalks into the Alma Rubens story like some hateful specter, from the lowest depths of the infernal place itself.

Prosperous, highly respected man, the good doctor.

Luxurious offices, a fine home, a large circle of admiring friends.

In good standing in his profession, too, and a great stickler, no doubt, for what is known as professional ethics.

The doctor was perhaps not to blame for giving poor little Alma Rubens her first dose of "dope."

She was in agonizing pain, and he didn't know any way to stop that pain—except with morphine.

So he gave her morphine—but how about what he did when that little girl and her mother started to Hollywood to get a footing for Alma in the pictures?

Alma Rubens says that well known, highly respected doctor gave her mother a tube of the little white pellets, that eased her pain so magically and told her to be careful and not give them to the child any oftener than once in two hours.

The doctor may have said something more about the danger of drug addiction, but if he did neither Alma Rubens nor her mother had the faintest idea what he meant.

The first time one of the extra girls on the lot out at Hollywood complained of over-fatigue and pain Mrs. Rubens in the kindness of her heart took out the little tube of morphine, shook a white, harmless looking pellet into the palm of her hand and passed it to the extra girl, saying:

"Take this, my dear, it's wonderful"—and so it was "wonderful," in its own hideous, cruel way.

Just how far was that doctor to blame for such an appalling situation?

'Let Him Who Is Without Guilt—'

This excellent cartoon, by Don Chilcote, of the Chicago Evening American, and appearing in that newspaper, is inspired by the fact that investigation proves that Chicago is far down the list of crime in a report covering major cities of the United States and in many of which Chicago has been pointed out as the horrible example.

Golf Widowlogues

"Thank heaven, there's a nice, fat, soft, billowy, pillowy divan waiting at home for me!" exclaimed Mrs. Green fervently, as she and Mrs. Divot tottered out of the shop after an orgy of bargain-hunting.

"Me, too!" echoed Mrs. Divot. "Heaven bless the inventor of stuffed furniture! I've often wondered how a man must feel after a hard day of golf, to come home to one of these modernistic apartments and sink down on a cast-iron sofa. Who invented modernistic furniture, anyhow? Some prison guard, on a rainy holiday?"

"Very likely," said Mrs. Green. "Or some doctor with a sadistic complex. It's so clinical! Living amidst it is like living in an operating room. But, the astonishing thing is that women have actually fallen for it, and are trading in all their big, roomy, he-man arm-chairs for silly-looking little things that no full-sized man could fold himself into."

"After the morris-chair disappeared, it took men years to get accustomed to wing chairs and club-chairs. And, now, just as they have learned to relax in these and discovered where to put their feet, behold, they are expected to double-up into these little nursery ornaments.

"Woman is always thinking up some way to make a man uncomfortable! She's found window curtains, so that he can't see through the windows; waxed floors for him to slip and slide on; Colonial antiques that fall to pieces in his hands; guest towels that he is afraid to touch; seven course dinners that give him indigestion—and so on ad infinitum. But, this new furniture craze is the ultimate refinement of cruelty!"

"Oh well," laughed Mrs. Divot, consolingly, "we'll all have to get miniature husbands to fold into.

"But, I like men and rooms and furniture big and substantial. I don't want a toy husband—or a toy house! All my life I have loved a gracious room. YOU know what I mean—a warm, soft, inviting room, with mellow lights, deep, wide cushioned chairs and soft, cheerful, sun-tinted walls. A GRACIOUS room! That's the kind men like. A gracious room—and a gracious woman! These are what every man longs for—to make him forget that he is living in the machine age!"

Nobel Dreamed of World Peace

By Archibald Henderson

One of the greatest and, in a sense, ironic contrasts is afforded by the genius and the disposition of Alfred Bernhard Nobel, the great inventor. The man was frail in body and sensitive in temperament to an extreme degree. He was constantly working with nitroglycerin; yet if it touched his skin he was violently affected by its influence, having to lie down in order to recover from its effects.

Although himself fragile and delicate, he dealt with the most powerfully destructive materials known to man. He was the inventor of dynamite and various other forms of high explosives, and accumulated a great fortune through their invention.

Another great contrast is found in the career of this extraordinary man. The greater part of his life was devoted to the creation of implements of war. Untold damage of the most horrible and devastating character could be, and has been, wrought by the high explosives which he invented.

And yet, after he had accumulated a fortune of nearly ten million dollars, he devoted a great part of it to the cause of promoting and furthering world peace, and bringing about fraternity and good-will among all the nations of the earth. It would seem as if, in his will, he had sought to undo what he had devoted his entire life to accomplish.

The will of Alfred Nobel is one of the historic documents of modern times. Under its terms a number of prizes, some $37,500 each and sometimes more, are annually awarded to those people, men or women, irrespective of nationality, who during the twelve-month have made the most important discoveries in physics, chemistry or physiology, or have written the best literature "of an idealistic tendency," or have contributed most to the cause of international brotherhood, in the suppression or reduction of standing armies, or in the establishment or furtherance of peace. No other bequest in modern times has attracted such wide interest, and the awards each year receive world-wide notice and recognition.

The view that Alfred Nobel merely promoted the cause of warfare by his creation of high explosives is surely a superficial one. It has been contended that his inventions have had an inestimable effect in promoting the ends of civilization. As Nobel's biographer in The Book of Popular Science says:

He has blown railroads through the hearts of mountains, has made harbors on inhospitable coasts that shelter the argosies of commerce as well as the powerful vessels of war; he has given the farmer a new implement for breaking up his ground and for the uprooting of the stumps that formerly made cultivation impossible. He has given the road maker, the mine operator and the contractor a power such as they never before possessed. He has enabled us to lessen the gradients for railroads and for highways, so that now we can at last eclipse the Romans as makers of roads.

Canals and docks result from the explosion of his dynamite; rivers become navigable by the same treatment. Dynamite, the product of a terrible vehicle of destruction, has become a disciplined force which is now indispensable to the engineer and maker of tunnels and roads.

Among his most famous inventions were dynamite and blasting gelatin. Nobel was a highly gifted chemist, and, although his two greatest inventions were initially due to accident, exhaustive chemical researches had to be carried on to complete the inventions. Nobel died at San Remo, Italy, December 10, 1896.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

Clara Bow, as you know hired a gal called Daisy De Voe.

Maybe that sounds like poetry, but what follows isn't.

Clara got mad at Daisy. Summoned her into court on an embezzlement charge. Daisy came—on high—with a little grip filled with letters, telegrams from erstwhile lovers—and the trial that was to have been Daisy's became Clara's. Why was Daisy allowed to produce her purloined telegrams and letters? Why couldn't Clara have lovers and letters if she wished? What had that to do with an embezzlement charge? Nobody seems to know. But it's plainly evident that Daisy got plenty even with Clara.

Says Harry Richman, once Clara's fiance—"Here's Daisy, accused of embezzling $16,000 from Clara—accused by Clara of attempting to obtain $125,000 from her for her letters and telegrams. And what happens? Daisy brings these letters and telegrams into court—and it's Clara that's got to do the explaining, not Daisy. 'How come?'"

And plenty of others are echoing—"how come?"

We don't know Daisy or Clara. We don't know whether Daisy two-timed Clara or Clara two-timed Daisy, and what's more, we don't care a hoot. But we would like to know how come that our courts can be used for any such squawl-fest.

As taxpayers we support those courts, you and I. If Clara's sobs and Daisy's snorts cost the state $50,000—which they will, and plenty more—you and I have to dig that $50,000 out of our pockets. We may have spent years of hard labor accumulating that wad. We may have led thrifty, disciplined lives, and have the liveliest contempt for brawls and brawlers, but that makes no difference—we must come across.

Public trials—which once existed for the purpose of Justice—have now become one of the most popular and pernicious rackets. If I get mad at you, for any real or imaginary grievance, I can charge you with any crime under Heaven, drag you into court, and you'll have to prove yourself innocent. But what happens to your reputation and the taxpayers' money during that procedure?

There was that case of the old minister charged with misconduct by a malicious girl. The girl afterward confessed to perjury, but that didn't help the minister. Broken and shamed, he had killed himself.

And as for heart balm and alimony grafting—there's no end to what a bright girl can accomplish with the backing of a sympathetic judge. Nor should we blame the judge. He is only doing what we expect him to do. He can't refuse to admit such cases to trial. Under our present arrangement, any one may press any charge, however abominable and false.

What do you think of that arrangement? Isn't it possible to prevent such predatory raids? Couldn't we have committees to pass upon motives and charges, before they are given expensive judicial consideration? Shall any peevish pee-wee be allowed to use our courts and our money for his or her personal stick-up game?

Her Hands

Sometimes I wonder if she understands
The lady with the lovely, idle hands!
Their slenderness, their pallid hues conspire
In startling background for her rubies' fire.
They are so swift, so graceful pouring tea,
Like birds they flutter when they wave at me;
At bridge they are all eagerness, so gay,
So filled with triumph when she wins at play.
Like Beauty's own her hands that never wrought
One deed that sprang from any kindly thought,
That never lent their supple strength to share
Another's burden, trouble or despair.
Sometimes I wonder if she understands
How all Earth's progress came by toiling hands.

Text For Today Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people.—Proverbs, xiv:34.

BE A PITTSBURGH BOOSTER
To Your Friends in Other Cities

Fine Man, No Doubt

But Have We None as Good, in America?

JUSTICE MINEICHERO ADACHI.

This learned judge, born in far away Japan, worthy of your respect and admiration, was recently Japanese Ambassador to France.

He resigned that high office to become President of "The Permanent Court of International Justice," which is the long name for the WORLD COURT.

This is the Court into which many sentimentalists would like to force the United States.

It is a sort of back door to the League of Nations. And the League of Nations is an organization through which European countries are trying to stop cutting each other's throats.

They would like to get us in to tell us what to do in case we are needed in their European quarrels, either for cash or soldiers.

Thus far we have kept out. But if we went into that back door of the League of Nations, alias "The Permanent Court of International Justice," alias the World Court, we should send one judge over there to sit under this extremely intelligent and able presiding justice, with ten or more other judges, all extremely able and a large majority of them extremely HOSTILE to the United States. Under such circumstances what do you think would happen to US?

We respect the learned Justice Mineichero Adachi, and feel that he would do his best to act impartially in all matters coming before him. Some of the other justices, doubtless, would do their best to be impartial also, although some might be less meticulously conscientious than this Japanese judge.

You have faith in human nature, but you say to yourself:

"After all, haven't we judges of our OWN here in the United States to settle our national and other affairs satisfactorily? When there were fewer than 4,000,000 Americans we managed to get along without going to any European court for our decisions and without joining any European League of Nations. And George Washington, whose birthday approaches, advised us to keep out of such things. Why must we now, with more than 120,000,000 Americans, wander off across the ocean, 3,000 miles, to get decisions from a foreign court!

"What is the matter with our own high courts! We are not speaking now of magistrates' courts and such institutions, but of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Why not let the honorable Justice Mineichero Adachi render decisions for JAPANESE and CHINESE, GERMANS, FRENCH, ENGLISH, EGYPTIANS, as many as choose to ask!

"And why not continue to have our own decisions rendered by American judges as in the past!"

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Thoughts while strolling: What became of milk crocks? One thing about a business depression, the best people can't escape it. Moe Ducore scurrying along. Few women use water on their faces any more. Broadway's sky glow—like the fume of an eternal fire.

Kent Cooper, a Columbus, Ind., boy, who made good in the city. Silk house robes for little boys. Ash trays in agate. And a beauty in jade with rubies. Noel Coward looks a flop eared country boy. But is London's most polished sophisticate. In a silk hat, you'd take Eddie Guest for Mayor Walker.

If I were a young beau I'd trot after Eva Le Gallienne like a dog following a covered wagon. Never hear about Babbitts any more. Except in the American Mercury. Helen Hayes and Charles MacArthur. The Chrysler silver tower will glitter seven years without cleaning.

Al. G. Smith's office is on the eightieth floor of the Empire Building. Also the offices of John Raskob, Pierre duPont and Louis G. Kaufman. Brooklyn has the second largest hotel in the world. The largest is the Stevens in Chicago. They don't sprinkle nutmeg on New York milk shakes.

Dr. Abraham Flexner, of the Rockefeller foundation, resembles a lanky, backwoods parson. But can talk millionaires out of millions for philanthrophy. Those austere elderly clerks in big jewelry establishments. The noble old Roman—Jack Curley.

Cafe sign: "Try our Tom Collins." A Great Dane in an Austin. Robert Ripley is, b. i. o. n., growing bald. Those brisk haberdashery owners always in boxes at the ball game or in ringside seats at Garden fights. What happened to Harry Wills, the colored boxer?

The ultima thule in shop names: "Mon Petit Salon Intime." Leo Newman, the ticket agency man. The Loew theaters are always celebrating an anniversary. Those corner loafers who shoot away like frightened trout when a cop turns the corner. Girls you just know would buy baby leopard coats.

From a cabaret ad.: "Dance on a satin smooth floor to an orchestra that simply keeps your feet curveting?" Sounds like kidetting!

Newest in handkerchiefs is a mentholated invention of extra soft linen. Grand for sniffles.

As the curtain falls on an act at a big comedy hit, a frantic wife and mother murmurs: "Incest, incest!" Which gives an idea of comedy plots this season.

The other day I met one of those model babies reared by rote to a healthy flapperdom. She had been fed by the tick of the clock, properly balanced in calories, soothed with violet rays and bounced mathematically. In a precise sort of way she was fairly good looking, yet to me she did not have the grace, clear eyes and eggshell complexion of a tenement born child, nurtured in slum doorways and on sunless fire escapes, who sells newspapers on upper Lexington avenue.

This Lexington avenue girl, incidentally, wants to be a newspaper writer. But tells me her boy friend objects seriously. He is a little sweatered pug—a preliminary fighter of the type who socks some opponent to sleep and shouts over the radio: "Hello, Mamma! I'll be right home!" He hangs around her newspaper hutch constantly. Recently I asked him why he objected to journalism as a feminine career. "Dem dames," he replied, "know too much about grammer and not enough about cookin'."
